New Village is Plopped Down Between Water Mill and Southampton

By Dan Rattiner

In what is surely the greatest scandal to hit Southampton Township in a decade, the Town Board has stood quietly by while certain individuals have created an entire village on private property. These individuals, who will remain unnamed for purposes of this article, but surely have personal ties to members of the Southampton Town Board, have proceeded to rapidly build a village without any permits whatsoever and without any visits from any code enforcement or police officer. It has been in place now for five weeks.

The property, about forty acres, is zoned farmland. It is on the Montauk Highway between the village of Southampton and the hamlet of Water Mill, both of which have long ago received the proper permits from Southampton Town and, in the case of Southampton Village, from the State of New York. The buildings are substandard and not up to code, violating laws involving plumbing and heating, insulation and setbacks, improper building materials and the pyramid law.

Pumpkintown, as it is called — read the sign out front — includes its own transportation system — a two dimensional wooden school bus without license plates or inspection sticker, a fort, a castle that may violate height restrictions, a pony riding ring, a hay bale stadium — a sure fire hazard — and a pumpkin patch. It has a little downtown area where there is a store that sells jams, corn and pumpkins and it has a small residential area of tiny, under 800 square foot and therefore illegal homes, although they were vacant when this reporter visited there. They are occupied, according to the wooden replicas of the residents staked into the ground out front of the homes, by Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs. Also a witch. There are no paved roads in the village.

There is also a very large pumpkin patch, probably the only legally zoned use on this

CHRISTOPHER ROCANCOURT IS SHIPPED OFF TO FRANCE

By Dan Rattiner

In the summer of 2000, a dashing 32-year-old man swept into the Hamptons accompanied by an entourage of security men, assistants and drivers, went to the Pink House bed and breakfast in downtown East Hampton and checked himself in as Louis Rockefeller of the Rockefeller fortune. When he spoke, people took notes, made cell phone calls, scurried off and scurried back. It was all quite impressive.

Rockefeller was here for three weeks, and during that time, he talked openly about the investments his family made around the world. He was, of course, privy to many of them and often sat in when final decisions were being made. Mostly the family invested in Sure Things. With amazingly high returns.

His presence here created quite a stir in the community. He went to fine restaurants, to plays at Guild Hall and at Bay Street. And as sometimes happens, people wanted to meet him — especially people who had saved up some money, but then had made investments that soon proved to be disappointing.

Perhaps I can help you, Rockefeller said to a stockbroker who had lost about $70,000 in the market. What I could do is lend you $100,000, and then you could use it to invest in some of the Sure Thing projects that my family is involved with. You could probably double your money in one year. Then you'd pay back the $100,000 and walk away with the extra $100,000 free and clear.

The stockbroker, who said he was nearly at the end of his rope trying to hold things together, said he was just so grateful that Mr. Rockefeller would make him this offer.

Rockefeller said there was nothing to it. He liked the man. In fact, he'd like to play tennis with him the next morning. Perhaps he could play tennis with him at his club. One of his Martha Stewart recently told Fortune Magazine that she regrets relinquishing her title as Chairman and CEO of Martha Stewart Living Omnimedia during the ImClone stock scandal, and that the decision was made mostly to show the public that she was taking the investigation seriously. However, the move does not seem to have affected Martha's reputation as a powerhouse. She's number 21 on Fortune's 50 Most Powerful Women in America list.

Correction

Last week, this paper published my article concerning the Child Development Center of the Hamptons. It has been brought to my attention that the article contains factual inaccuracies. Dr. Stephen Sicilan, the psychologist who was discussed in the article, worked for the preschool only, not the charter school. Neither Dr. Sicilan nor the teacher who quit after he was let go, Kelly Quartuccio, was a founder of the school; only Dawn Zimmerman Hummel was, and she had not run the school from her home in its earliest days. Also, although the organization that runs CDHC, Services for the Underserved, is located in Manhattan, its executive director, Donna Colonna, is personally involved from the Hamptons and lives in Sag Harbor.

Aside from the factual inaccuracies, the article failed to present the school's side of the matter reported upon. According to Ms. Zimmerman Hummel, Ms. Sicilian's departure did not cause broad-based concern, but rather upset "two people." I offer my apologies to the paper and its readers, as well as CDCH.

property, where visitors are expected to pick them up off the ground and bring them to the store — without any laborer's wages being paid — and then they are sold to children, in violation of another law, although I do not remember what that is.

Another strange thing is that the pumpkins on the ground have already been cut from their stalks, making it questionable about whether they have even grown there. This newspaper sent reporters out to conduct an all night stakeout of the town in the hopes of finding that new ones are being trucked in from New Jersey or some other place, but we came up empty and used up the newspaper money appropriated for the stakeout on pizza and cokes. The truckers, apparently realizing the jig was up, and the fat was in the fire, came in and saw our black van with the aerial on the top and drove away. Or something.

We also sent other teams of reporters combing through official records both in the Town of Southampton, the State of New York and the U. S. Department of Labor. We could find no record that any withholding taxes were being paid for any government employees in this new village and we were unable to find any incorporation papers or any record of anybody ever holding an election. We were unable to find any permits for the harboring of elves. Also, the place seemed almost completely populated, other than the elves, by children dragging their parents.

It seems, from our preliminary observations, that this community is being run by religious leaders or a royal family or some dictatorship or something, or maybe a wizard, completely flaunting and in complete violation of the freedoms required by the Constitution of the United States.

Our reporters were able to determine by talking to employees at Pumpkintown that the chief of Pumpkintown — realizing that the jig was up — is preparing to pull up stakes and clear the hell out sometime in November before the first snowfall.

Arrests will have to be made before that happens. • assistants would call in the morning with the time. Rockefeller didn't say which club, but of course the stockbroker assumed it was the Maidstone.

In any case, morning came and the assistant called. The courts at the club were fully booked that day, unfortunately. But they could meet at the public courts if he wished, the ones in Herrick Park. The stockbroker agreed, and they played tennis there.

The thing was, Rockefeller told him, that he needed to go to his family with some good faith money from the man. $20,000 would do. If he brought in $20,000, then they could lend him $120,000 and then of course he could pay back the $20,000 right away. That would show good faith.

I think you see where this is going. In the third week, the Pink House, their bill still unpaid — they had given Rockefeller credit, of course — decided that who they ought to call about this man was the East Hampton Village Police. The police came in and shortly arrested Mr. Rockefeller, who turned out to be a Frenchman by the name of Christopher Rocancourt. Rocancourt had taken in about $200,000 by this time from various people in our community — including a masseuse who gave him all the money she had in the world, $5,000, for a good faith gesture.

The thing is, Rocancourt would have been a whole lot better off if he had paid his bill at the Pink House and skittered off in his limousine, but apparently it was not in his nature. You might call it a fatal flaw.

But it turned out to be not quite fatal. The local authorities charged him with two counts, one of which was failure to pay his bill and the other bilking people out of thousands of dollars. And though he was held in the Riverhead Jail without bail, by the time morning came, he appeared before a judge who, due to a bureaucratic foulup, had before him only the first charge. The judge asked if he pleaded guilty or

Live Report

On the Spot Newscast from our Correspondent in Pompano Beach

By Dan Rattiner

Last week, Hurricane Wilma crossed the midsection of Florida, with 145 mile an hour winds and torrential rains that overturned cars, felled huge trees, knocked all the power out for four million people and caused considerable damage to thousands of buildings. Dan's Papers sent a reporter down to Florida to be on the spot when the hurricane passed over, then file a report for this newspaper.

Actually, this newspaper sent this reporter down to Florida twenty years ago. It's my mother. Along with my late father, she lived for forty years in Montauk and together they ran the White's Drug and Department Store there. Then they moved down to Pompano Beach. The eye of Hurricane Wilma passed directly over my mother's Palm Aire apartment complex.

We have, my mother and I, waited twenty years for her to file a hurricane report. She said she would, if one passed over. But we could never arrange for that to happen.

Actually, what she said twenty years ago was, "Tell you what, if one hits me I'll file a report for Dan's Papers." This was after we asked her to evacuate her home as a hurricane approached (and missed).

A year ago, we had three hurricanes come close. In early August, Hurricane Charley came up from the South toward her.

"It's not going to hit me," she said.

Charley skimmed along the west coast of Florida, hitting Sanibel, Fort Meyers and Naples before veering toward the east coast and sliding just north of my mother, clobbering Orlando as it came through.

Then Hurricane Frances came wobbling in from Bermuda directly at her.

But you can't get anything perishable. Almost none of the stores are open. The Publix is closed.

"It's not going to hit here," she said.

And just before it reached the coast, it veered north and hit Palm Beach.

Hurricane Ivan threatened South Florida.

"It's not coming to Pompano Beach," she said.

"You should get out of there, mom," I said.

"Tell you what. If it comes right over the apartment, I'll file a report for Dan's Papers."

But then it crossed over the Florida Keys and veered north and hit Pensacola in the Panhandle.

Then on September 22, last year, Hurricane Jeanne appeared in the Atlantic. As we watched hysterically, constantly calling my mother, it made a full loop in the Atlantic, just off the coast of Pompano Beach, then headed right toward her.

"I'll be fine. If I go to the airport, how do I know it won't hit the airport? It won't hit here."

Jeanne continued its loop a little further on and then, like a slingshot, thundered into the mainland and hit between Jupiter and Stuart up north of my mother.

"See?" she said.

My mother is 93 years old.

Well, last week, Hurricane Wilma finally hit her. Here is her report, from later the next day, after the storm had come and gone.

"First of all, I'm okay," she said. "So you shouldn't worry. And I'll be fine. I've got everything I need. Food. Bottles of water. And now the electricity has come on in the building. But this was a terrible storm. And I have never seen so much damage. All the beautiful trees, you could cry. And yesterday, the first day, things were very bad."

"You live in a complex of over 120 apartment houses on six golf courses," I said. "Tell our readers how the complex is making out?"

"More than half the buildings were damaged. Practically every building that had screened terraces facing south, which is where the wind came from, had all their terrace screens blown off. The buildings facing the canal had all the windows blown in. These places are uninhabitable. Fortunately, my terrace faces north and the golf course. The only thing facing south is the kitchen door and that was fine. And I'm on the ground floor. So the upper floors of the building got the most of it.

"Yesterday, nobody had electricity. None of us. Four million people without electricity. And they said don't drink the water. My neighbor, Jerry, took me in his pickup across the street to the Pompano Race Track where they were handing out ice. There were long lines. But it was an absolutely beautiful day. The hurricane had blown out the weather. The sky was clear. And the temperature was cool, so we wouldn't need air conditioning, which was, of course, out. Everybody was in a good mood. We got four bags of ice. There are no traffic lights. Everybody helps everybody. Nobody is in a hurry. The people are so polite. And they're all talking to each other, sharing stories."

"We heard that tempers were short everywhere."

"Not here. I was out."

"How's your car?"

"The Toyota is fine. We lost just one car in our parking lot. A tree fell on it. At Building 12, every single car in the lot got damaged. Who decides these things? Some of them at Building 12 got hit by trees, some had, on the side facing the wind, their windshields or side windows blown in. Personally I think it was a tornado.

"Food is a problem. I stocked up. But you can't get anything perishable. Almost none of the stores are open. The Publix is closed. Everything perishable had to be thrown out. The only stores with perishables are those that have their own generators. The Wal-Mart is open, but they sold out right away so there is nothing on the shelves.

"At dinnertime, yesterday, the Mexican family next to me put a grille out in the parking lot and everybody cooked up some barbecue. You're not supposed to build a fire in the parking lot, but they did.

"And this morning, I heard that the Pena-Dutch store on Sample Road was selling roast chickens, roast meats, fresh fruits and vegetables, but only for cash. I drove over. And what a treat. I got stuffed cabbage, all sorts of things. When I was checking out I told them to watch carefully because I only had a hundred and twenty dollars and I didn't want it to go over. It came out to forty three."

"No gouging."

"No gouging here. But there are long lines at the gas pumps."

"How are you for gas?"

"I still have three quarters of a tank. I'm not using the car much. By the way, President Bush flew over in a helicopter. That was nice of him."

"Did you wave?"

"I did. But I'm not sure he was looking down at that moment. He ought to come down and walk around down here. This is going to take a long time to get fixed up. But thank God I don't think anybody died. By the way, you know that gas station that is at the corner of Powerline and Atlantic?"

"Yes."

"It has that sheltered roof so you can pump gas out of the rain? It's gone. Just blown away."

"What else?"

"I'd say about a quarter of the apartments in the complex, including this one, have power back on today. Yesterday, when everything was without power, I had all sorts of people stop in. And they are still stopping in. They want to make phone calls. Most everybody lives way up high and takes the elevator. So if they wanted to use the phone, they came to me on the ground floor. I'm happy to be able to help them. I have unlimited minutes."

"What about cell phones?"

"Cell phones are out. Satellite dishes got bent sideways or something. They're still out. And those that aren't don't work because the battery's run down. Of course you could charge them in your car. I'm going to buy a car charger for next time. But then you use up the gas."

"Is anybody there now?"

Dangers of the Internet, the Speed of Light and Other Stories

By Dan Rattiner

Ever wonder how it is that somebody in Hong Kong can be interviewed on television live and we can see and hear them at exactly the same time?

I mean, we all know that the speed of sound is much slower than the speed of light. You see the lightning, then you count slowly and whatever number you've counted up to when you hear the rumble of the thunder is how far away in miles that it is from you.

How do they do that? A theory I developed on my own is that on television they somehow fold the sound of the speaker in with the video, so you get both at the same time. It doesn't make sense, but that's what I came up with. But now, what I've been told is they have a way of ANTICIPATING what somebody is saying. They send that on ahead, and then they count slowly, and depending upon how far away the television feed is going, they look at a chart and they delay the video for that long. One second for Honolulu. Ten seconds for Los Angeles. Twenty seconds for New York.

When Neil Armstrong took his first step on the moon, he actually said "one small step for man and one big giant for mankind" the day BEFORE he came down the ladder. It works.

Another thing that has been on my mind is storage on the Internet. I understand saving things onto hard drives. You save it there, and there it is in your computer. Or you save it on a CD and put stacks of CDs in the closet and there that is. But about six months ago, Google announced that whatever files you have that you want to store, they'll give whatever you need to you for free when you sign up. No limit. After Google did this, Yahoo did it too. And now AOL has announced they'll do this for you too.

Now I don't know how much you've got, but I've got a lot and I know people who have huge amounts of stuff. Literally hundreds of billions of bytes of stuff. They can't live without it and

TO FIGHT DARKNESS, FIRE THE ROCKETS

By Dan Rattiner

It seems to have been just a few weeks ago that the sun was setting out here in Bridgehampton at 7:30 in the evening. It was wonderful to make a beach picnic, set out a blanket on the sand of an autumn evening and watch the sun go down behind the Atlantic Ocean while raising a glass.

It wasn't going to last, I knew. The sun was setting earlier every day. It would be 7:30 p.m. one day and then 7:26 p.m. the next. But surely, at that rate, these leisurely evening sunsets would be going on for a long, long time. The winter equinox, when the days are at their shortest, is in December, after all.

Now, suddenly, just a few weeks later, it seems the sun has clanged shut behind us and the sun is setting at 4:50 in the afternoon and heading inward toward 4:30. How could this have happened?

The other day, I mentioned this sudden trick that turned day into night, to a friend. I expressed the opinion that we have seven good sunshine months — April through October — and then comes the darkness of a five month winter. This year it seemed to happen so fast. The leaves turn. We turn the clock back. And then the next day everyone's walking around wearing some eerie Halloween costume, an evil holiday if there ever was one, signifying either nothing or the abyss of darkness that we now allow ourselves into which to sink.

"You need to get up earlier," my friend said. "I get up at six, work out for half an hour, have a bite to eat and then go off to work. I love Standard Time. Now it is light when I get up. Haven't you ever dressed in the dark? It's miserable. Get with the program. Light is still there. Just turn your own clock back."

I tried it the next day. I got up at 6 a.m., and they have storage devices that fill basements and garages and attics with it. Now, all they've got to do is join up for about $20 a year and these big multinational conglomerates store it all for them. Everything.

You get ten million people doing this, a hundred million, a billion, the whole thing is going to sag and one day come crashing down.

It's got to. We burn huge volumes of gasoline and the fumes collect in the atmosphere and become global warming. It's up there. We take garbage to the dump and it is no problem but when everybody does it, and they do it every day year after year the garbage piles up and up and eventually it gets so high they can't take any more. You drive by and look at it. Garbage Mountain. The highest point in town. Now our garbage has to be trucked to some other places where they don't have garbage but want it to make a ski resort or something. So we've worked it out.

But you use dialup or cable or wireless and you send off data to storage, and a million people send off data to storage and pretty soon you'll go outside one day and the whole place will just be all foggy and muggy and filled with static electricity. And that will be that. The next day, there'll be a crash and we will lose everything.

One thing I do know about personally, because I've been there, is money laundering. There are these shady characters and they show up in a forest outside of Woonsocket, Massachusetts where, deep in a wood, there is a commercial money laundry so enormous it will knock your socks off.

Ever wonder what a hundred thousand trillion billion dollars in cash smells like when combined with hot water and Tide? It boggles the mind. But I've seen it, giant smoke belching factories filled with huge humming washing machines, great driers, and literally thousands of people working at the tables, drying, stacking and putting rubber bands around the stacks, then packing them up into cardboard boxes. I stood behind a tree watching all this. Nobody saw me.

I saw huge trucks driving up with the wise guys smoking their cigars in the driver's seat, and next to them gun molls in red dresses with plunging necklines you'd never want to tangle with. They stop. The big overhead garage doors roll up, and the trucks lurch forward, a few bucks flying out the back and wafting to the ground behind them. And then they disappear inside and the garage door closes.

Ah, the smell of money. Dirty money when the wind blows from the east, clean, crisp, dried money smelling of Tide and Clorox when the wind blows from the west. I got spotted. An alarm went off and I ran like hell. Those were the days. • by golly, it was light out, not dark out. Normally, I wake up at six, see that it is still dark, and go back to sleep. Now I saw that what they chopped off the end of the day is now tacked on to the beginning of the day. It's right there. The pants are too short, yes. But if you lower the belt line, they are longer at the bottom. Voila. I noticed this, then crashed back down on the bed and went back to sleep.

The hell with this. Washington D. C. is south of New York but not too far south. They do have a little longer window of light than we do, but not much. When the sun sets at 4:30 p.m. here, it sets at 5 p.m. there. I think, with all the scientific knowhow we have in America, surely, given everything, we ought to be able to persuade our government to pass laws ordering the firing of giant rockets — tipping the earth just a little farther over into the wintertime. Get some more of those rays. Everyone would benefit, from San Diego to Anchorage, from Key West to Buffalo.

Yes, there would be less light in New Guinea. But what do they care? They just fall asleep in the jungles when they want and wake up when they want. Another hour of dark for them wouldn't make much difference. Trust me on this. March through November, it's light and wonderful. Then come the holidays with darkness and twinkly lights, followed by New Year and the hangover through January.

The only problem remaining is February. •

My Opinion

If You Disagree With This, Read It Anyway. Then Write Me.

By Dan Rattiner

I was down in Austin, Texas last weekend and, among other things, had the opportunity to visit the five-story Presidential Library of President Lyndon Baines Johnson. You stand in the central rotunda of the library, surrounded by a wide variety of displays, souvenirs, artifacts and even a talking replica of Johnson leaning on a split rail fence, and you look up to see, on four floors of interior balconies high above you, the orderly display of President Johnson's Presidential Papers.

It is quite an impressive sight. Each balcony has rows and rows of huge red volumes with shiny gold seals on the front. The volumes are identical, all lined up in rows —one for each day of his Presidency I suspect — filled with whatever correspondence crossed his desk that day. Also whatever notes he passed or doodles he made. And maybe some names and telephone numbers.

The Presidential Papers are inaccessible to the casual visitor. The whole affair exists on those balconies inside clear double pane bulletproof glass. It is hermitically sealed. And the idea is that far, far into the future, historians will be able to piece together from these notes and letters and so forth, maybe even some audio tapes, just what exactly happened during the tumultuous five years that LBJ was our President during the 1960s. In the meantime, only if you are a historian with the most impeccable background, if you fill in all the proper forms and get all the proper permissions, and if you agree to go through a decontamination process, you might be allowed in there to poke around. But only to look at the stuff that is still not top secret. Briefly.

What is the matter with these people? The people who rob banks don't keep notes. Drug lords don't write daily diaries.

The vision of these four balconies, an imperial sight indeed, came to mind this week when I began to look at the utter stupidity of our current Presidential administration in the paper trail they have chosen to leave behind as they went about trying to sink Valerie Plame's husband Joe Wilson. There are the notes kept of the meetings between Vice President Cheney and Scooter Libby. There are notes kept of the meetings between Karl Rove and President Bush. There are notes kept of the meetings between Scooter Libby and New York Times reporter Judith Miller.

What was going on here, when all was said and done, was that, as the President explained why he was going to invade Iraq, a decision was made either by the President or Vice President to "get" former ambassador Wilson. Wilson was writing letters contradicting the President. He wrote that the President had not told the truth and knew it when he said in his State of the Union Address that the Iraqis were looking for uranium in Africa. Bush and his men would "get" him by outing Wilson's wife, who was a secret CIA agent. That oughta stop him.

To do this, they would use their contacts with administration-friendly right wing leaning reporters and commentators and they'd get the word out. They summoned reporter Judith Miller of the New York Times, commentator Robert Novak of CNN and Matt Cooper of Time Magazine, and they dropped the name. Exclusively. But don't tell anybody who gave it to you. Protect your sources. Meanwhile, notes of the meetings were being dutifully recorded, to presumably be locked away amongst Presidential papers to be seen, someday far into the future, by who? Intelligent life from another planet?

What is the matter with these people? The people who rob banks don't keep notes, although occasionally you read about a really dumb one who has a map of the insides of a bank in his back pocket. Drug lords don't write daily diaries. Money launderers, in fact, do a dazzling thing with bank accounts designed to try to prevent anybody from figuring out where the money went.

All I can think of is that all the members of the administration, as they do what they have to do to make the world safe for democracy, keep one eye on the ball and the other eye on this hermetically sealed four-tiered, red-volumed, gold-sealed time capsule of the sort that will, when the administration is over, preserve all the Presidential Papers of His Majesty George W. Bush for all those aliens eagerly looking back, a million years from now, to see what was going on in the United States of America during the first eight years of the twenty-first century.

Well, let me save them the trouble. Here's the eight years in a nutshell, as I see it. We elect an aw, shucks man from the west in the oil business, who completely turns what this place stands for on its head. He rolls back thirty years of environmental progress to keep the national economy robust in spite of a huge national debt. Exploration and exploitation resume. The economy thrives.

Then, advised by his Vice President, another man in the oil business, and by longtime friend Karl Rove, he decides, without having been attacked by people from that place, to invade a medium-sized oil country in the Middle East. Whatever the motives were, misguided, inaccurate or not, this is a first. America, which advertises itself as a land of freedom, human rights and reason, is no different than any other nasty country in the world.

After that, the administration cuts funding for child care, the elderly, the disabled and the poor, bungles a rescue operation in New Orleans, then discovers it has never properly prepared for a possible flu pandemic.

Following this, protests begin about the war in Iraq, which has become a quagmire. Stuff happens in Syria and Iran, which, at an earlier time would have resulted in this administration sending in more Marines, but now just get tepid complaints to the United Nations asking that they do something. Turns out our military resources are tapped. Then the price of oil unexpectedly soars. The reason is that though more oil can be pumped out of the ground, they forgot to build enough new refineries. And there's been no energy policy for anything other than oil. Nevertheless, it turns out that the oil companies have made a huge, Guinness-Book-of-World-Records killing with these high prices. Their annual reports come out and there's no hiding it. At least the oil millionaires can hold their heads up high.

The administration sinks into indecision. (Much to the relief of many citizens who realize they are probably incapable of further harm.)

An attempt to reform Social Security, a declared solution to what turns out to be a non- existent problem, founders. Nothing else new is proposed. In fact, for the entire eight years of the Presidency, nothing new is proposed on the domestic scene whatsoever — other than a tax cut for the rich, and a sell-out of the elderly to the pharmaceutical companies. And that's about it. Presidential popularity sinks. Presidential appointments fail. Scandals loom. And if you want to learn more about it go someday to the George W. Bush Presidential Library in Crawford, Texas, get yourself decontaminated, and have a look yourself. •

48 Hours

The Winner of the Competition to Make a Movie in Two Days

By David Lion Rattiner

"My name is Geir, as in Richard Gere."

"Yes, sir, right away."

This is a common conversation that Geir Magnusson has when he makes a phone call to an office. "I can't tell you how many times Richard Gere has gotten things done for me," says Geir Magnusson, local actor and a prize winner at the Hamptons International Film Festival.

Two weeks ago The Hamptons International Film Festival held a contest called the 48-Hour Challenge. Basically, filmmakers were required to film a movie in 48 hours, based on requirements that the festival established. The requirements for the movie were as follows: 1. Have a theme that is a "good idea." 2. Use a local actor. 3. Use a local celebrity. 4. Use the phrase, "Night Sharks." 5. Have a conflict resolved through dance. 6. Use/eat a bag of apples. 7. Have an up-side-down moment. 8. Have something revealed in a book. 9. Have a moral lesson.

These requirements stirred the imaginations of the filmmakers that entered and all of them came up with clever ideas for short movies. However, the winners of the contest, Savannah Haske, Ian Noe and Geir Magnusson, have quite the story to tell. Somehow, this group managed to convince Alec Baldwin to appear in their film.

Geir stopped into the office on Friday to talk about how Alec Baldwin ended up doing the film. The story is truly amazing.

When the trio got the requirements of the contest, they went to work and began brainstorming. "We met at eight-fifteen in the morning with the objectives that we wanted to accomplish," says actor Geir Magnusson, a thirty-year-old photographer, a native of Iceland and now a year-round resident of Amagansett.

"When I saw that we needed to have a local celebrity in the movie I immediately thought of

MORE ABOUT THE EAST HAMPTON PLANE CRASH

By Debbie Tuma

East Hampton village residents are still reeling from the trauma of the plane crash, which occurred near Main Street on October 24, during the last day of the Hamptons International Film Festival.

All that remains at the site of this tragic crash, which claimed the life of a Nantucket pilot, are the scorch marks on the trunk of an old locust tree on Mill Hill Lane, which is known for its historic trees.

"This one tree caught fire at its base when the plane hit it," said East Hampton Village Fire Chief David Browne. "We pruned the branches that were also burned, but hopefully, the rest of the tree will survive."

Browne said after the small, twin-engine Cessna plane caught fire and broke apart on the street, a piece of the burning wing hit the tree. "We believe the fuel from that wing started the fire upon impact," he said. "But amazingly, we didn't find that much fuel from the plane." When asked if there was any environmental damage to neighboring homes from the fuel or the white foam, which was sprayed on the damage to suffocate the flames, he said, "This foam doesn't cause damage, and there really wasn't enough fuel to do any damage, either."

Browne said he had sent about 55 of his men to this scene of the crash last week, which occurred at 1:44 p.m. on October 24. The mangled plane was removed at about 7:30 p.m. and transported by flatbed truck to the East Hampton Village Highway Barn on Accabonac Road, where it was secured behind a fence.

"The Federal Aviation Administration and the National Traffic Safety Board are investigating to see why this terrible accident happened," he explained.

Browne said during the cleanup of the plane not guilty, he said not guilty, and then the judge, seeing it was a minor offense — not paying a hotel bill — set a trial date and released Rocancourt on his own recognizance. So off he went.

Rocancourt was finally caught in 2003 when a widow at a Vancouver ski resort said that a man who said he was a Rockefeller bilked her out of $50,000. The Canadian Mounted Police brought him in that time. And when it was learned that he was wanted on charges elsewhere, they extradited him to the United States.

Rocancourt was tried and convicted on several counts of fraud in a New York City court after he agreed to a plea bargain that would let him out of jail in only two years, with all the various other charges dropped.

During his time in jail, he wrote a book called Moi, Christophe Rocancourt, orphelin, play-boy et taulard, which basically said it was not his fault that all these people gave him all this money. He was born and raised a street urchin in Honfleur, France, and it was just with pluck and daring that he had not starved to death and had instead made a living for himself as someone that people would trust and give money to. As for him being a Rockefeller: who could believe that a man with a French accent could be a Rockefeller? Those that believed that fooled just themselves. They deserved what they got.

Last week, Christopher Rocancourt was released from jail and extradited to his native land. Let them deal with him. As for his book, if you want to buy a copy you can do so on BarnesandNoble.com. Perhaps it will help him pay back the reported two million dollars that he no longer has but has promised to return. • crash, his men wore decontamination suits in case of hazardous waste problems, but that "there wasn't really any contamination at the site."

Browne said, "Although a few pieces of this plane landed in the sidewalk, we were extremely lucky that the plane didn't land in someone's yard or house, and that no one else was hurt."

Browne said that after the Village Highway Dept. crew cleaned up the site, it was finally passable to cars after about 8 p.m.

The pilot, 50-year-old William Holdgate of Nantucket, was killed on impact. He was apparently flying his plane back to Nantucket from Georgia. His close and long-time friend, Rick Smith, of East Hampton, also 50, said he was a very experienced pilot.

"I've known Billy for 30 years, and I've flown with him many times, from Long Island and Hyannis, Mass., to Nantucket," said Smith. "I can't believe this could happen to someone so knowledgeable as him, so I would suspect it was some defect in the plane."

Smith, a fisherman, said he first met Holdgate when he lived on Nantucket, and Holdgate was an usher in his wedding there during the 1970s. "His family is well-known there, as natives of Nantucket, and Billy worked in the construction business, and also had his own glass and mirror company," said Smith. "His grandfather was the game warden of Nantucket."

He said Holdgate, who was divorced, was "a good, hard-working guy. He helped out a lot of people, and he would do whatever he could for you. He was a good friend, and he will be greatly missed by me and by the people of Nantucket." Smith said he was "shocked" to find out about the crash, and that he had "just called Billy a few days ago, to catch up." A funeral service was held for Holdgate on the island of Nantucket.

Alec Baldwin because I have a picture of him and I standing together at a party from last year. As Ian and Savannah started brainstorming more, we came up with the idea that I would be an Icelandic tourist who is out in the Hamptons and in search of Alec Baldwin. Since I speak four languages, it was an easy part for me to play."

The movie that they created, which is titled Ein God Hugmynd, meaning "in good humor," earned a lot of laughs when it was screened at the film festival. Geir's character is extremely entertaining to watch as he hitchhikes through the back roads of Amagansett and gets picked up by a worker for the film festival who is lost. The driver, played by Savannah, finds herself relying on him to get her to the film festival. However, Geir's character only wants to go to Alec Baldwin's house to ask him if he has any "good ideas." Since he can't speak any English, a lot of miscommunication happens. At one point, Geir's character lights up a cigarette in the car, which immediately draws anger from Savannah's character. Geir then throws an apple that he is eating out the window of the car to which Savannah's character says to him, "We don't do that in this country."

"We shot the movie from noon until six in the evening. It was a lot of fun. We all had a really great time. It can only be described as pure fun. But I was really tired when we finished shooting so I headed out to Starbucks to get a cup of coffee," Geir explained.

"As I was waiting in line, I saw Alec Baldwin sitting down at a table with someone. So I very casually walked up to his table and waited to get eye contact with him. When I did I said to him, 'I have been looking for you all day!' I then started to tell him about the movie and when I finished telling him about it, he read my mind and said, 'When do you want to shoot it?' I got really excited when he said this. How often do you get to do a movie with Alec Baldwin in it?"

After a round of cell phone calls to all of his friends on what had just happened, Geir, Savannah and Ian got together the next day and shot a scene with Alec Baldwin. The scene took one take and is about twenty seconds long with Alec saying, "I've got tons of good ideas. Let's go to my house and talk about it."

Geir and Alec then walk away into a fade out.

The movie has received so much buzz and praise that the three of them are going to make a go of it and try and to make a feature length film. "We have received a lot of positive response around this Icelandic tourist character and we think that we could make a really great comedy out of it. Geir simply fits the part," says Ian Noe, who was a writer for the script and who also works at Luma Pictures as an executive producer.

The creative trio certainly has had their share of comedic moments. Geir talked about how the three of them were laughing almost the entire time they were shooting the film and how much they enjoyed working with one another. The audience at the screening of the movie certainly seemed to enjoy it. "They were laughing the whole time," says Geir, who also explained that he is really looking forward to working on a longer movie. "I really hope that we can pull it off."

Who knows what is in store for the future of these filmmakers? Will they ever hit the big screens all across the country? Only time will tell. One thing is for certain, however; they will work together in good humor.

Peace Pipes, Bowls and Indian Remains are Found in Riverhead

By Christian McLean

In the midst of a terrible storm with pouring rains and rising tides, Park Supervisor Jim Richeson of Suffolk County's Indian Island Park in Riverhead went to check the conditions of an eroding beachhead at the tip of the park. The eroding beach, which has dramatically deteriorated over the past twenty years, is now encroaching upon one of the park's roads and has become a safety issue. When Richeson arrived, the road was fine, but upon further observation of the bluff, he saw bones jutting out of the sand wall. The county park police were notified and then Suffolk County Medical Examiner Charles Wetli was called upon to examine the bone, all common procedure when someone stumbles upon human remains.

With the high tide only a half an hour away and the cold Peconic waters nipping at their heels, the parks department panicked and let the medical examiner shovel out the remains without any thought as to stratigraphy or noting context in which the artifacts were found. While collecting the bone, Native American cultural artifacts were also unearthed in what looks to have been a cremation burial pit. The bones were brought to the county medical examiner's office while all the other artifacts were retained by Suffolk County Parks Commissioner Ronald Foley.

At the medical examiner's office, county forensic anthropologist Vincent Stefan was called in to examine the remains. By sifting through the hundreds of bone fragments, none larger than a square inch, Stefan observed that they were in possession of no less than three sets of remains; three adults, burned for some reason. Because they were scorched from the burns and because of the small size of the pieces, Stefan could not offer any idea as to the sex of these people or when they may have lived.

The day after the discovery, the Vice

BEACH PEOPLE WITH BEACH HOUSES TO PAY BEACH TAX

By David Stoll

Last Tuesday evening, the Southampton Town Board approved the creation of two of three proposed new tax districts. These districts, known as beach erosion control districts, are intended to raise money to address beach erosion. The two that got approved two look at lot like Dunehampton.

The districts, which were first proposed in August and have been the subject of public hearings, are called the Southampton East District, the Southampton West District and the Southampton Tiana District. The Clerk of the Town of Southampton has maps showing the precise boundaries. Roughly described, the districts are as follows:

The East District runs from Town Line Road in Sagaponack to a point on the beach in the middle of Sagaponack Pond. The northern boundary largely follows the east-west streets closest to the beach, including Daniels Lane, but also spikes up to bring in some of the houses on private roads north of Daniels Lane.

The West District picks up where the East District left off, in the middle of Sag Pond and runs all the way through Bridgehampton and Water Mill just up to Fowler Street, where Southampton Village begins. The northern boundary runs along the southern-most east-west roads on either side of Mecox Bay, including the entirety of those roads along the barrier beach between the ocean and bay.

The Tiana District, which was postponed for consideration at a later date, runs along Meadow Lane starting at the easternmost part of Shinnecock after Southampton Village, all the way to the edge of Quogue Village, covering the entirety of the barrier beach between the ocean and Shinnecock Bay.

The resolutions creating these districts

President of the Suffolk County Archaeological Association, David Thompson, was called to examine the site and the artifacts. Thompson, who refers to himself as an amateur archaeologist and has no educational accreditation, save self-teaching, did the best he could in identifying the objects. The more significant pieces were a grit-tempered conic clay vessel, or pot, called Vinette One, which was cord marked (a cord was used to press the inside and outside of the pot). It was in fragments, but has since been pieced together by someone in the commissioner's office. Other objects were a clay pipe, a smooth stone, and a "bird stone." Thompson placed the site at the Transitional Period or possibly the Early Woodland Period, between 3000 and 1900 years ago. Although David Bernstein of the Long Island Institute of Archaeology at Stony Brook was contacted about the site, as of press time the county has yet to have a professional archaeologist examine the artifacts. (To prevent this from happening again, Suffolk County should appoint a professional archaeologist as an onsite consultant so other important information about future historical sites will not be lost.)

To gain a time frame for the site, Radio Carbon Dating can be used on the human remains, but that is very controversial. The ideal step would be to date any charcoal that may have been found at the site. The process, which measures the half-life of Carbon-14 in organic matter, can place the charcoal within a 50-70 year window of the exact time the charcoal was burned. According to Vincent Stephen, the county does not have any plans to go through with the costly dating process. Since the site has been crudely excavated by the medical-examiner, with no archaeologist on hand to document the event or the placement the artifacts, Radio Carbon Dating has been ruled out. The only way to deduce the age of the site now is through a comparison of the artifacts with those that have been found in other sites throughout Long Island. It's a relative system and does have flaws, but is currently the only way to go without a complete excavation of the area.

Based on comparison and knowledge of cultural materials present on Long Island, renowned archaeologist Dr. Eugene Boesch (who was contacted by Dan's Papers to examine the photographs of the pipe and based on the information we provided him) infers that the site is probably later than Thompson had originally thought. The pipe has very distinct markings known as dentate stamping in shell-tempered clay. According to Boesch these marks and the tempering process are indicative of the Middle Woodland Period 100-800 A.D. But the combination of the Vinette One pottery which was manufactured from the Early Woodlands until around 500 A.D. could imply that this site is from the middle of the Middle Woodland Period around the time the Vinette One pottery was being phased-out.

The future of the site is almost as unknown as its past. The erosion on the beachhead will continue and potentially unearth even more artifacts if nothing is done to shore it. Currently all that protects the area is a snow fence and a sign warning of the unsteady ground, but those impediments haven't stopped children from jumping off the six-foot drop or throwing stones into the site, nor will the fence protect the bank from another storm. Currently the county is under negotiation with the Shinnecock Nation as to what to do with the site. Under the New York State Standards for Archaeologists, the fate of the artifacts which have already been unearthed also resides with the Shinnecock. If the Shinnecock decide they want the remains and cultural material, even if they are not Shinnecock, they have a right to them. The artifacts would then either be reinterred (reburied at the site) or displayed in the Shinnecock Indian Museum as a learning tool. If the Shinnecock decide they do not want the remains and artifacts, they will probably be boxed and stored in the basement of some county-owned facility. Whatever the case may be, the artifacts should be examined by a professional archaeologist to gain as much insight as possible about the Indian Island site and the culture that occupied it.

Paul Sidney
WLNG

By David Lion Rattiner

Paul Sidney is one of those guys that is hard not to respect. The flagship broadcast personality for WLNG, which is based out of Sag Harbor, has served the East End since 1962. When there is an all-you-can-eat buffet at Gurney's in Montauk, Paul Sidney is there. When there is a Miss Mattituck contest, Paul Sidney and his "Friendly Giant," the large broadcasting buses that WLNG is known for, makes sure that the news gets to the East End live. The broadcasting that he has done for the communities on the East End has kept the community connected and family-like, as he broadcasts birthdays over the radio. He was recently honored at the Suffolk Chamber of Commerce, where over three hundred people gathered to see him receive a lifetime achievement award. Paul Sidney is old school and the East End loves him for it.

Born and raised amongst stick ball, Coca-Cola in glass bottles and the Brooklyn Dodgers, Paul Sidney found himself on the streets of Brooklyn at just five years old thinking about radio. "Ever since I was a kid I knew that I wanted to be in radio. It was just something that I always knew that I wanted to do. When other kids were outside playing stickball, I was inside listening to the radio. I knew every single radio personality that was out there."

Paul attended public high school in New York and then found himself studying broadcast journalism at New York University. By 1960 he found a job for himself in Old Saybrook, Connecticut, working for the radio WLIS as a DJ. "When I told my parents that I wanted to go into radio they thought that I was crazy. They thought that I should go out there and get a job like everybody else. Everyone that they knew that got into that business had some sort of connection with radio. My family didn't. I had to do it all on my own," says Paul.

Paul began to find a fan base at WLIS and a buzz around his quirky comments and voice started to earn him popularity. In 1962 a man by the name of Fitzgerald Smith who was planning on starting a radio station in Sag Harbor heard Paul on the radio and thought that he would make a great addition to the upcoming station. It was from here that the legend of Paul Sidney was born. He packed up his bags, moved to Sag Harbor, and hasn't looked back since.

Much of the success that WLNG has enjoyed can be attributed to Paul, who is now the President and General Manager of the station. Many of the decisions that he made about the station were criticized, such as putting a reverb on all of the music and words that go through the station. Paul saw this reverb as a way of individualizing the radio station from everybody else. "I did that because that way when you listen to the station you know that you are listening to WLNG." He also made the decision to call the station an "oldies station" despite advice from consultants that this would draw popularity away from the radio station. Needless to say, those consultants were wrong.

Paul's life has been filled with a lot of adventures due to his broadcasting experiences. He told me that the biggest radio shows that stick out in his head are the ones that he does when a big storm or a hurricane hits. When the electricity on most of Long Island goes out, the Sag Harbor station stays open using generators and alerts the public on all of the information that they can possibly give. "Every time there is a big storm people really rely on us for information that they need. When they don't have electricity and are lucky enough to have a battery-operated radio on hand, they tune in to us to find out where they can get food and fresh water. These are just basic everyday things that become real trouble during a storm. They want to know when their power is going to come back on and we tell them."

"Every time there is a big storm people really rely on us for information that they need. When they don't have electricity and are lucky enough to have a battery-operated radio on hand, they tune in to us to find out where they can get food and fresh water."

This reporter can vividly remember being ten years old and listening to Paul Sidney on the radio during the winter, praying that he was going to alert my parents that Springs School in East Hampton was going to be closed for the day so I could head outside for a snowball fight.

These days you can still find Paul doing what he does best, down at the radio station in Sag Harbor giving the news of the day and introducing songs. There does not appear to be any retirement in the future for the East End staple who claims to have no plans for retirement. It's a good thing too, because there are a lot of birthdays to announce, hurricanes to battle and kids that are going to wish for a snow day.

TWENTYSOMETHING... By David Lion Rattiner

Listening In

I was sitting in Hampton Coffee in Water Mill having a cup of Joe last Sunday where I found myself enjoying the latest issue of this newspaper. As I sat and read, enjoying the smooth coffee, I saw another guy doing the same thing that I was doing and I found myself hoping that he would start reading one of my articles and start laughing.

The guy was maybe forty-five, was wearing a leather jacket and was drinking a latte. He looked kind of like an Italian mobster, and when he pulled his Blackberry out of his pocket and made a phone call, I couldn't help but listen in.

Yes. Hello, I am calling about the house on Mecox Bay.

I started to freak out when I heard this and went to the page in Dan's Papers where there was an advertisement I had seen for a house in Mecox on the Bay. I would kill to live there. The price tag on the house was $15 million. Out of my price range.

I started thinking about how lucky this real estate agent was that was dealing with this guy. I got my Massachusetts real estate license when I was in college and spent a summer doing rentals in Boston's Beacon Hill. I can tell you that real estate is not an easy thing to do and sounds a lot easier than it actually is. It takes a long time for people to make decisions on where they want to live, people don't show up for appointments, and a lot of time gets wasted. But a commission on a $15 million dollar sale hooks you up with a sweet paycheck.

I want to tear the whole thing down and rebuild. Is this possible?

Hmmm.

Yeah, I want to tear it right down and build something new. I need to build three separate houses for my different wives. One of them is pregnant right now. But I need to build three separate houses for them and for my eleven children. I can't have all of my wives living in the same house, that would be ridiculous (laughing).

This was getting really darn interesting. There was a brief pause as the agent on the other end must have been explaining to him some building codes.

What do you mean you don't think I can do that? Well, can I subdivide the lots? Uh huh.....uh huh.....Well can you find me something like that on the ocean? Maybe three separate lots next to each other? Uh huh.....Well, what about bulldozing? I read somewhere that I can just burn the house to the ground if I want to. The fire department will put it out and I can get some kind of a tax break. Is this true? Can I light the match? Hang on one second I have another call. Hello? Hi, honey? You're going into labor? Well, I'm on the phone with a real estate agent right now, have Natasha drive you to the hospital and I will meet you there. Yes, I'll be there.

Was this guy for real?

Are you still with me? Yeah, I'm sorry, my wife is going into labor, can you believe it? I haven't even thought of a name yet. No, it's fine, I'm going to meet her there. Okay, so I have to buy three separate lots. Well, that is really ridiculous. And what about burning the house down to the ground? Well, can you look into that for me? Okay, good. There are a lot of laws here, huh? Speaking about that, there are two other things that I am concerned about. I read somewhere that Jerry Seinfeld had a really

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Islander #373
Deer Me...

Three deer, a pregnant female, her two year old, and her new baby from spring, have made our front yard part of their rounds for breakfast and dinner. The mother doesn't even flinch when you walk within ten feet of her so we named her Brazen. The adolescent is so focused on eating, he doesn't move unless she does, so we named him Grazen. The baby is very skittish and bolts if we even look out the window, so we named him Spooky. As I walked to my car I looked straight into Brazen's eyes and wondered what this dull animal could be thinking...

"I bet this stupid human is wondering what I'm thinking.... How about you get in that car, fatso, and let me and the kids finish off the boiled cabbage you threw out here in peace."

"What, Mom?"

"Nothin,' sweetie. Mommy's just attempting an interspecies mind meld to tell this woman not to boil the cabbage with corned beef, it gives Mommy gas."

"Let's go over to the Calabro's. Your Aunt Melanie's there. We can get some decent Italian in their back yard, I bet."

"Hey, Mel!"

"Hi, Cathy, hi, kids!"

"How's it going? How many bucks you got chasing you now?"

"You know how it is, everybody is somebody else's ex. Same guys, we just rotate partners. I'm up to three bucks now. First it was just Rodney and Clyde, now Bennie wants in."

"Bennie? He's just a 2-pointer, isn't he?"

"Yeah. He just got his first points. You know how they are when they're young. He's thinks he's 'all that' and a bag of chips besides."

"So you're not even gonna give him a chance, Mel?"

"Oh, please... in his dreams. I told him to meet me in the woods behind the country club.....you know, by the deer blinds..."

"Melanie! They'll be twenty hunters there!"

"Yeah...I'm trying to feel bad about it, but he needs to exit the gene pool. That moron would be out of his depth in a puddle."

"You heard about Mary and Joe?"

"Kinda, Cathy....it's sounds like they have a drinking problem."

"I heard they were eating and licking out the bottles in back of The Dory and Joe thought it'd be a good idea to go for a swim..."

"Oh no..."

"Yeah. They came out by New York Ave and sent about four cars off the road. It was great."

"I love playing chicken with cars on New York Ave. It's so narrow and all those trees! I love when they honk the horn, like we can't see a half ton vehicle traveling towards us at thirty miles an hour...."

"Cut them a break, Mel, they don't know that we use their cars for natural selection. Any deer that stands there and gets hit, deserves to be on a mantle or in a freezer somewhere."

"You heard about Christine, Cathy?"

"Oh yeah... how awful."

"Everybody tried to tell her. Stay away from the salt licks. That's how they get you. Her family did a big intervention with her last Spring. She did so well this Summer, she just couldn't kick the lick it, I guess."

"Well, Freddie won't be alone for long..."

"You got that right. Have you seen him lately? Eight points...."

"Oooooo nice. Where's he hangin' these days?"

"He's still pretty upset about Christine. He's gonna be dodgin' the bullet this year, playing it safe in Mashomack."

"Ah...where the wussies live. Can't blame him though."

"He'll be okay. He'll get his nerve back next year. 114 won't be the same without him. Remember that three car accident he caused last season? It's gonna be hard to beat that record."

"Freeze, Mel.... there's a woman looking out her back window at us."

"I see her. She's got that stupid, 'I wonder what the deer are thinking" look in her eyes.'

hard time building his baseball diamond and I don't want to run into that. I'm a big sports guy and I'm planning on building an ice hockey rink. Yes I'm serious. I want to be able to go surfing and then play ice hockey. It is going to be regulation size. They can't stop me, can they? I mean, it is my property when I buy it, isn't it? I can do what I want with it.

There was a brief pause. I was leaning really far in to hear what the real estate agent had to say about this. I think she was saying that she would look into it.

Okay, there is one final thing. It is going to sound a little strange, but it is important to me.

Could this get any weirder?

I have a lot of exotic animals from Africa that I want to bring in. I have two elephants, a lion, three gorillas, a couple of crocodiles and a hippopotamus. I'd be willing to fence everything off of course, but are there any rules out here regarding them? I'm sorry what did you say? Yes, I like having them as pets, it is really cool, especially feeding them. Okay.....right, yeah of course I'd be willing to pay for permits and things like that. Yes, well I have to go, maybe we could set up a meeting next week. Yes, that is my number. You have caller ID, huh? Well, give my office a call too. My secretary can set everything up. Okay, ciao.

It ain't easy being a real estate agent.

"I've got twelve people over the house. We're playing cards. The cable is still out so there is no TV but I have a radio in the kitchen. I've got people making phone calls, I've got people who can't get up to their apartments, or people whose apartments don't have windows. We're having a good time. And the New York Times still gets delivered."

"What about the golf course?"

"The golf course looks pretty good," she said.

"How about the peacocks?" I asked.

The golf course has peacocks.

"They must have hidden somewhere."

"Are you going to play?"

"Not yet." My mother plays three days a week.

"We heard that the storm came through very quickly about 1 a.m. Tuesday morning."

"Yes."

"What was it like to have 145 mile an hour winds?"

"Tremendous noise. Great howling. But I really don't know personally. That's what people tell me. I had my hearing aid out. So I slept through the whole thing."

Mom said she was happy to be able to file a report for Dan's Papers. I am left with the image of my mother, a very small woman, holding a microphone with one hand and hanging onto a telephone pole with the other while the wind blows her sideways, smiling at the camera and filing her report. Dan's TV.

Look, I'm fine, she says. Don't worry. • explain that something needs to be done to address the severe coastal erosion in Southampton, which is putting public and private property at risk. A special annual assessment will be added to the tax bills of those who live within the new districts. The total amounts to be assessed for the districts are: $250,000 for the East District ($0.4675 per $1,000 assessed value), $250,000 for the West District ($0.4737 per $1,000 assessed value), and $100,000 for the Tiana District ($0.9089 per $1,000 assessed value). The money collected will be put in a kitty and only used to control beach erosion in the districts. Expenditures will be recommended by advisory committees consisting of homeowners living in the districts.

It will be interesting to see whether $600,000 each year can make a difference, while the Army Corp of Engineers dawdles and the Georgica Groins remain in place. While I am no more a fan of taxes than anyone else, I do wish that the special districts covered more than beach-front properties, not only to raise more money to save the beaches but also to remind everyone in the Township that we townspeople, all of us in common, own the beaches through the Trustees, not just the beachfront property owners.

Meanwhile, the Dunehampton proponents of yore might be considering the old adage "Be careful what you wish for; it just might come true." After all, they claimed that their beachfront village was needed to address beach erosion because the Town was not doing enough. Whatever one thinks of the sincerity of this rationale, the Town certainly is doing something by creating Dunehampton-like tax districts.

LI Bluesfest Raises Hurricane Dollars

Atlantis Marine World Hosts A Hurricane Benefit To The Sound Of Blues Music

By Debbie Tuma

Blues music rocked the fish-decorated walls of the Atlantis Marine World Aquarium last Friday night as the Long Island Blues Society raised about $1,500 for the Hurricane Katrina Relief Fund. A crowd of blues lovers packed the popular aquarium, located on East Main Street in downtown Riverhead, to dine and dance the night away to the sounds of three great blues groups.

The special guest for the evening was Coco Robicheaux, the legendary medicine man from New Orleans, who had a particular interest in helping to raise money for his hometown and for the many displaced people there. Wearing a big cowboy hat and his signature long hair, Coco had his own special blues sound, which got everyone up and dancing. Even the large crabs in the nearby tank were waving their long claws in time to the music, making us all wonder if the sea life at this great aquarium is also partial to the sounds of blues music.

This huge aquarium, with its colorful underwater murals, its tanks full of brilliant tropical fish, tiny seahorses and large sharks swimming in deep-water tanks, is a really fun and unusual venue for having a musical event. In between dances, we could walk over and pet the friendly stingrays in the lobby pools, or we could walk around admiring the different displays of fish, corals and shells.

A great act was Tommy Keys, whose energy was addicting, and who also kept the party rolling along. Guests danced and also sat down to a wonderful buffet dinner served in the cavernous halls of this unique aquarium. In keeping with the New Orleans theme, guests dined on gumbo, jambalaya, rice, and catfish.

Our crew of about 10 blues enthusiasts also enjoyed listening and dancing to the sounds of Pamela Betti and the Bluebloods, who we recently heard upstate at the weekend-long Blues Festival at the Nevele Grand Hotel in Ellenville, New York. Pamela Betti, the lead singer, was back in her usual form, belting out her songs in her deep, powerful and throaty voice.

Andy Caradona, of Bay Shore, who is a regular attendee of Long Island Blues Festival events across the island and the city, and who brought along about ten other friends, said, "This is the second blues event I've attended this year at Atlantis Marine World Aquarium and I really like coming here. It's a great atmosphere, the music sounds fantastic and we're having a fabulous time."

Caradona was also a winner of some restaurant meals in the Chinese auction, which took place along with a 50/50 raffle. Prizes were donated by local restaurants and stores who generously participated in this worthwhile event to help the hurricane victims.

Gary Graziano, Fundraising Chairman of the Long Island Blues Festival, who was accompanied by his wife Mary-Ellen, said, "The Long Island Blues Society is an organization that supports the blues musicians on Long Island. We work with local restaurants and bars to book venues for performers, and we also work with the annual Riverhead Blues Festival." Graziano, who lives in Riverhead, said there are over 100 blues groups on the island.

"Blues music has grown in popularity here, and our events are well attended," he said. "We get close to 3,000 hits each week on our website, LIBS.org, and we have shows going on all year long."

He said the Long Island Blues Society has been around 10 years, and was started by a group of blues lovers including Charlie McKenna, Joe Vignola, Mike Scalva, and Mark Gresser. The Long Island Blues Society is planning their next big fundraiser in March, to support music on Long Island, and to send groups to compete in Tennessee. Blues enthusiasts should stay posted for dates, times and places to be announced on their website listed above.

The fundraiser went on without a hitch. Thankfully, we were lucky enough to raise some money for those that desperately need it.

North Fork Negociants Release First Estate-Grown Wines

Several of Long Island's smallest wine producers are Negociants. Negociants buy grapes from a local grower, then make, age, blend and bottle wine under their own label. This practice is common in many wine-producing regions, particularly in Burgundy, home to well-known negoicant labels like Louis Jadot and Duboeuf. It's an attractive endeavor to many winemakers because it can be difficult, from a financial perspective, to plant/grow/maintain a vineyard as well as buy all equipment necessary to make and bottle a finished wine.

In the United States, negociant-made wines have the words "produced and bottled by" on the label, which indicate that at least the fermentation and subsequent production was done by the producer or company. If you see "estate bottled," that means that the grapes were grown, fermented, and the wine bottled on the owner's property. Phrases such as "cellared and bottled by" or "made and bottled by" are fundamentally meaningless.

Schneider Vineyards, founded in 1994 by Bruce and Christiane Schneider, has operated as a negociant since its inception, buying grapes from growers on the North Fork. Their first wines were released in 1997 and were quite popular among wine drinkers and wine critics alike. Then, in 2000, the Schneiders planted their own 22-acre estate vineyard on Roanoke Avenue in Riverhead and the first wines made from 100-percent estate-grown grapes were released just a few weeks ago.

Unlike their first wines, which were bottled in 1994 and released three years later in 1997, these first estate releases were bottled in 2004 and spent only about a year in the bottle before release. And, while the wines are flavorful and show potential, their youth is evident.

Many experts feel that most red wines aren't "ready" until at least five years after their vintage date and that notion is supported by these early-release wines. Far from flawed, they will likely improve and blossom with time.

The Schneider Vineyards 2004 Cabernet Franc Le Breton ($25) was fermented at cool temperatures and blended with 10 precent dry rosé of Cabernet Franc. It is medium garnet in the glass and abundantly aromatic, with a nose dominated by black pepper with subtle notes of blackberry and cherry in the background. This wine tastes as young as it is, but is intriguing with great acidity, some mineral character and a lingering finish. If fruity reds are your favorite, this may not suit you, however. Buy a few bottles and lay them down for at least a year or two. 360 cases were produced.

Slightly more ready for drinking now, the Schneider Vineyards 2004 Syrah Hermitage Clones ($25) is much less aromatic with only hints of red berries and spice on the nose. Medium bodied with nice acidity, but none of the jammy juiciness you find in warm-climate Syrah/Shiraz, this wine shows nice balance between fruit, earth and spice. Cool-climate syrah can be a real treat, so this may be worth waiting a few years for. 240 cases were produced.

These wines, along with Schneider Vineyards' Potato Barn Red, a tasty blend of Merlot and Cabernet Franc, are available at both The Tasting Room locations (www.tasting-room.com).

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Late Fall Advice

As the weather turns colder, it is hard to get motivated to work in the garden. Yet there are a number of activities that ought to take place while there are still some favorable days.

Check climbing roses and other vines to make sure they are securely attached to their supports. Winter can wreak havoc and severely damage these plants if they are unprotected. Use twist-ties, plastic rope or pieces of plastic garbage bags to tie plants because they stretch as the plants grow or become snowbound during winter. String and wire will cut stems.

Mound four inches to six inches of soil around the base of roses to protect them from winter damage. Use a mixture of peat and soil taken from another area of the garden to avoid damaging roots around the base of the plants. As chrysanthemums and other perennials finally die back with the first hard frost, cut stems to two to three inches above the soil and discard last season's dead stalks.

Dig up remaining tender bulbs, even though there is a tendency at this point to let them die. Store in a cool, dark place after the first frost. And, if you still have some spring bulbs to plant you can still plant them until about mid-November. (While it is best to provide four weeks or so for spring bulbs to root before winter, they will develop roots over the course of the winter.) When planting spring bulbs, place stones that have been painted with fingernail polish to mark locations. We believe this is better than using wooden stakes that tend to be unsightly.

Mulch tender plants and perennials that might suffer winter damage by mounding bark, peat, compost, sawdust, or salt hay over them to protect the root systems. As the frost kills leaves on marginal plants, trees, and shrubs such as figs and hardy palms, etc., mulch to six inches and wrap these in plastic sheeting or tar paper.

Many lawns have been devastated this fall by all the rain. If you have not applied a winter-type lawn fertilizer, now is a good time to do it. It will encourage strong root development and help improve lawn color at this time of year. If needed, now is also a good time for lime. Keep leaf and other debris off lawns to prevent dieback and diseases.

As soon as leaves fall from fruit trees and other deciduous plants, spray them with an insecticidal or dormant-oil spray. This will control over-wintering insects and diseases and prepare the plants for a vigorous spring. It is also a good idea to use a dormant spray on rhododendrons and Canadian hemlocks to prevent disease and provide additional winter protection. Never spray dormant oils on blue-colored evergreens because it will change the color to green.

Because the Hamptons have severe winters, it is important to feed the birds and other small beasties that may not be able to find food during late fall and winter. Natural food sources become depleted at this time of year. For a very small investment, you can feed an enormous number of animals and help them live through the winter. But be careful that feeding does not support a growing population of undesirable foragers such as squirrels and mice which seem to grow exponentially when there is an abundant source of food. Use feeders that protect food sources from undesirable animals.

We have a spot, distant from the house, where we provide leftover tidbits to foxes, raccoons, and an little opossum we've named Arnold. But be careful, available food can attract feral cats – one of the plagues of the East End.

We have a tiny brown bat that, somehow, finds its way into our basement every winter. (Repeated attempts to find out how it gets into the basement have been unsuccessful.) While our instinct was to have it removed, we have discovered something nice about this cohabitation. Despite the fact we occasionally duck to the floor when it flies about the basement, we are content knowing that it will survive to spring.

One delight for winter is to take the stones from fruit and to dry them slowly in an oven. A handful of the dried pits thrown on a fire in winter will make a crackle and then send up bright flames. They also give off a fantastic aroma that permeates a room.

Winter is almost here – but don't give up on chores. Now is the time to make a difference for spring!

Lanterns Around the World

There is a distinct difference between lighting designed to thwart darkness and lighting designed to illuminate. I find nothing so grating as the sickly glow of track lighting, whirring above the heads of diligent workers. Just ask anyone at Dan's Papers: once the winter sets in and natural light becomes more and more scarce. Many have the urge to flip the switch and allow the fluorescent light to create the mood. I implore you, though, hold off. This glow is not only unflattering to just about every complexion; but it also prevents you from taking advantage of all the lovely mood lights that could illuminate your home.

I am not saying that you should bust out the paper lanterns in your workplace. While I may indeed do such a thing, it is not completely sane or necessary. It's what you come home to that matters most, anyway, and there is a way to create a different ambience in every room with simple and inexpensive paper lanterns.

The earliest known paper lanterns originated in China around 250 BC. Their cultural significance traditionally conveyed a message: if a red lantern hung outside the door, there had been a birth or a marriage in the family. If a blue lantern hung, there was a sickness in the house. And a white lantern signified that the family was in mourning.

The Chinese devoted their second most culturally significant holiday, the Lantern Festival, to the paper lantern. The lanterns are often covered with rice paper, or sometimes silk or bamboo.

Paper lanterns were eventually adopted by Spain, and dubbed "luminaries." They were often placed outdoors, resting in the branches of trees, particularly on special occasions like Christmas Eve or The Feast of Our Lady of Guadalupe. They traveled to the New World via Mexico.

Hang paper lantern from the ceiling is a beautiful way to cast a soft glow on a room. Granted, it is not the ideal light fixture for the final round of fact-checking at a newspaper, but it creates a lovely glow on a dinner table or in a living room.

One of the most common styles of paper lanterns is the large, round sphere. My old college roommate and I used to highlight the differences between us by giving her side of the room one glow and mine another. We'd curl up in our respective corners of the room, and her star-shaped purple lantern and string of dark red lights contrasted with my soft blue globe lantern and green candle. The glow you cast in your bedroom creates a distinct mood, and paper lanterns are an easy way to capture the feeling you want.

The times, they have a changed, and I am no longer sharing a bedroom and trying to decipher where my glow ends and here begins. But the lanterns have endured. I have a white globe lantern now hanging from the ceiling in my dining room, and it creates a soft glow, where the glaring bulb used to be too harsh. It is muted, but still relatively bright. For a more mysterious, darker feel, try a red lantern. Its glow will be cast on all the walls, so even if your walls are white and bare, they will seem to have a richer feel. These paper globes are very cheap, and come in every color of the rainbow. Check out www.paperlanternstore.com for some ideas. They range from about $4 to about $14.

A newer paper lantern product that creates a soft glow in any setting is the Christmas light-inspired string. These small paper globes are all on a string of lights, and you can hang them across a doorway, string them up a banister, or get even more creative. They come in various colors. You can buy a kit at Target that even lets you design your own paper lantern lights. For $17.99, this kit includes glue, pop-up paper lanterns, tissue paper, and instructions so you or your kids can create your own special ambience.

Another creative take on the classic paper lantern is often seen around holidays. You take regular paper lunch bags and place a single tea light in each. Then line your walkways with these gently glowing lanterns to illuminate the way to your home.

Paper lanterns have been around for thousands of years, and they still inspire peace and serenity in the areas they occupy. So switch off that painful fluorescent light – come on, it makes us all look hideous. Set your mood with the soft, unobtrusive glow of a paper lantern.

Dan's HOME Guide

Q&A with BF Designs

We asked Barbara Feldman of East Hampton's BF Designs about how interior designers can help homeowners create a perfect living space.

What do Interior Designers do?

It's more than just picking colors! Interior designers plan space, select furniture and furnishings, and create interesting details that are reflective of a client's needs and desires. Working with an interior designer will assure a client that they will have a unique environment that not only looks beautiful, but will support a client's lifestyle.

When is the best time to start working with an interior designer?

Right at the beginning! If you are looking for a new home, thinking of building, or changing the home you live in now, interior designers can help you determine if a space will meet your needs by providing preliminary plans to help you decide.

An experienced designer can also help you estimate your costs and determine a realistic budget before you decide to move forward. The cost of interior design can often be included in any financing the owner may be considering.

How do designers work?

Designing interiors requires a clear understanding of a client's requirements, so an interior designer starts by asking questions, such as:

-What activities will take place in each area of your home?

-What style feels most comfortable to you?

-Do you have any special requirements?

Gathering information is called "programming." The designer then uses the program to create preliminary designs, showing proposed locations of walls and/or furniture ("space plans"). They will also present suggested color themes and design styles through the use of samples or color boards. Proposing space plans and color themes is called "Schematic Design."

Once a client has chosen a schematic design, the design is taken to the next level, whereby the designer clearly indicates their design intent through the use of drawings and detailed specifications. This is called "Design Development."

The final phase is Project Management. Now the designer pulls the pieces together. This may involve purchasing furniture, supervising installations of finishes, and/or interfacing with a general contractor to be sure the end result is consistent with the original design concept.

How else can interior design help?

Today interior planning is commonly done on the computer (CAD), thereby enabling designers to coordinate their plans with those of architects, engineers, and contractors. If done prior to construction, this can help to minimize change orders and "extras" that may occur after a house is completed and the owner discovers that the furniture won't fit or that outlets are in the wrong place.

Interior designers can also help if you are trying to sell a home that may not be presenting its best face. Making aesthetic changes to increase the value of a property is called "staging." Sometimes the smallest change can make all the difference, such as eliminating clutter, reorganizing furniture, changing a wall color, or accessorizing.

But if you have good taste.....why can't you do it yourself?

As in other professions, there is no substitute for experience. Any cost savings anticipated by "doing it yourself" will soon be lost when you find you have spent time and money on items that don't look the way you'd hoped, cost too much, or wear badly. Professional designers have resources for furniture and furnishings that are maintained and updated on a regular basis. Interior designers are trained to use their innate creativity to bring a special flair to the spaces they design so that your finished product will be more in keeping with your expectations. They are passionate about their work. They live and breathe design every day of their lives.

What about fees?

Interior design is a professional service. Time, experience, and creativity are what designers have to sell. Designers can charge in many ways, depending on the scope of work and complexity of the project. Some of these include: fees for design and specifications, percentage of cost of project, or a combination of the above.

It is important that everyone understand the terms under which you and your designer will be working. Working with a designer is not an added cost; it is an investment in your home that will bring you pleasure for years to come.

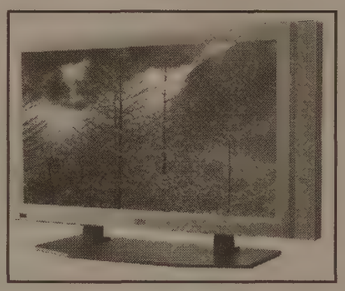
Top TVs Explained

Long ago, in a world where only analog tube TVs were in existence, buying a new set used to be a rather pleasant experience. But today, there are all sorts of new, high-tech TVs around, and that pleasant feeling you may have once felt has now turned into a nerve-wracking experience. Is LCD better than plasma? What's the difference between LCD and DLP HDTVs? What does HDTV stand for anyway? If all this tech jargon has you confused, don't worry, just read on.

HDTV stands for "high definition television," which has approximately five times the video quality of standard TV. It offers a much sharper and lifelike picture than what's been available for the last 50 years. HDTV features a much wider viewing area, with flat-panel TVs quickly replacing tubes as the direct-view televisions of choice. You can hang flat sets on the wall, on the ceiling, or above your mantle. With satellite and digital cable providers carrying more HDTV channels, more consumers are likely to buy one. There are, in fact, many HDTV-ready technologies on the market today, and making a choice can be difficult.

Plasma televisions contain a mixture of neon and xenon gas that fills the small space between two sheets of glass. When an electrical current stimulates this mixture, the process creates a bright, vibrant picture. These thin (as little as 3 inches thick) screen displays make outdoor scenes appear lifelike – like looking out a window. It's usually the most expensive technology to invest in because most of them are big-screen TVs – 42 inches and up. However, plasma TVs can suffer from phosphor "burn-in" caused by static images.

Prices have fallen for plasma TVs, and picture quality has improved dramatically, perpetuating plasma's reputation as king of the flat-panel, home-theater hill. With prices starting at about $1,500, owning a plasma TV is within reach of most shoppers. Compare that to the $4,000 or so that you'll have to pay for a 42-inch flat-panel LCD, and you'll see why plasma is continuing to surge in popularity. Top picks include the Sony 50-inch Plasma Wega HDTV (model No. KDE-50XS955), $7,000; the Panasonic 42-inch Onyx Plasma HDTV (TH-42XVS30UP), $7,000; the Pioneer PRO-1110HD PureVision 50-inch Plasma HDTV, $15,500.



Although their screens are smaller than either plasma or projection HDTVs, LCD televisions have advantages. They are thin (about 2 inches thick) and lightweight, so they can be hung on a wall. And they are much more energy efficient compared with other TV technologies. Their display is bright and crisp and, as with plasma, they have a wide viewing angle. Unlike plasma, LCDs don't suffer from phosphor burn-in and enjoy longer life spans – about 50,000 hours. However, many LCD TVs are pricey, especially given the smaller screen size. Another disadvantage is that they have a low response time, which means they may not handle motion – such as fast-paced sporting events – very well. Some choices include the Sharp 32-inch Aquos LCD HDTV (LC-32GD4U), $3,800; and the Sony 32-inch LCD Wega flat-panel HDTV (KDL-32XBR950), $5,500.

Based on digital light processing (DLP) technology from Texas Instruments, the DLP rear-projection TVs offer a sharp and extremely bright display in a lightweight cabinet (less than 100 pounds). They are not lightweight enough to hang on a wall, but with some at 15 inches deep, they won't take up too much space in your room either.

At the heart of every DLP projection TV is an optical semiconductor that can be considered the world's most-sophisticated light switch. This chip contains more than 1 million microscopic mirrors that sway back and forth to create the picture on the screen. They're also less expensive than their flat-panel competitors, but over time, consumers may have to replace a lamp at the back of the unit. Top picks include the 50-inch Samsung pedestal design DLP HDTV (HLP5085W), $4,200; and Mitsubishi's 52-inch (WD52525), $3,500.

The main players in this technology scenario would appear to be the plasma and LCD TVs, with the resolution in select LCD models being the only advantage over plasma. Because of the inherent expense of flat-panel LCDs, you might decide to go with plasma if you are shopping for a flat-panel set above 36 inches. Of course, the vast majority of LCDs being sold are much smaller than that, making the whole LCD vs. plasma debate sort of moot. However, you'll want to stay tuned as prices for large LCDs fall. And always remember to try before you buy!

Posters for Posterity

In one form or another, the poster is a decorative staple in almost every teenager's room. Most of us spent our formative years plastering our walls with heroes, rock stars, idols, sex symbols, or whatever and whomever else fit the phase du jour. We tacked them up, pierced the corners, taped the backs, the edges, we let them curl and fade in the sun.

As an adult, or at least an adult with taste, one doesn't usually hang posters like this. There are, however, some grown- up posters and some attractive ways to display them. The graphic prints can suit any budget and cover just about all imaginable genres or subjects. Still a Guns n' Roses fan? Love the Sex Pistols? Babes? Studs? Trippy psychedelic art? Absinthe? There are posters out there that, with the right choice of frame and print, can still work in the grown-up world.

Take for example, Guns n' Roses. The band doesn't exactly say hi-falutin' good taste, but if you look on a site like Wolfgangsvault.com, you'll find a nice array of posters dating back to the early days, before they could pack arenas, when the band was opening for The Cult. G n' R came a long way. These posters have history and minimal design, while later images take on a higher production value. If put in a well-made frame, and hung in the right room where the interior design matches the image, the overall quality can be greatly enhanced. No longer are you just a metal fan, now you're a collector of rock and roll ephemera. This basic formula works with most posters that can't be bought at Spencer's Gifts.

Another classic teenage poster is the "I dig LSD" Salvador Dali "Persistence of Memory" print. It's pretty much the most cliché art poster out there. In fact, only in America, it seems, do we choose to hang the cheesy art poster over a nice piece of actual art. The Monet "Water Lily" poster, Van Gogh's "Sunflowers" or "Starry Night," or the "Mona Lisa" are among the biggest no-nos. Go out and find an inexpensive painting, locally or on eBay that fits your taste. Support the arts. If you are married to owning a poster of your favorite master, consider buying something from an exhibition. These posters retain value, are of good quality and show a bit more sophistication. For the Salvador Dali: The Early Years show, the Met in New York City produced a beautiful image of the artist as a young man, standing on a Barcelona balcony in lovely black-and-white. The text advertising the show is in black and red, and the paper looks yellowed, giving it a vintage appearance. This immediately changes a room's look from college dorm to cultured-chic. Shop around. Exhibition posters can be found for reasonable prices, they look great, and carry more clout. You get the idea.

Other posters that continue to be popular are the Art Nouveau and Propaganda prints. Vintage French advertisements are quite the rage in kitchens, bathrooms, and hallways these days. They are so popular, as a matter of fact, that you can find many of the more popular images at your local TJ Maxx, or even K-Mart. They're usually pre-framed, and look pretty cool although the commonality makes a trajectory into the recognizably cheap and cliché, a sure bet. For more unique, albeit more expensive, posters of this ilk, visit Giraffics Gallery, on Newtown Lane in East Hampton. Giraffics has lots of excellent and authentic prints from children's books, theater, fashion, advertising, and more. The real high-end posters are available at places like this. Take a look to get a sense of what vintage posters should be all about.

Use your imagination and don't limit the possibilities. There are fine posters for all tastes. When framing, discuss choices with your local framer. Wallace Framing in East Hampton does a great job working to find the best solution for all your needs. Melissa generally suggests that mattes don't belong around posters, and she's proven herself right. There are traditions with framing that stand well over time. With the right selections and presentation, posters can make your home classy, hip, interesting or, at the very least, be great conversation pieces. Look around, find things you love, and use your best judgment. A good poster is sure to be a hit in your home.

Rediscover, Restore, Rejoice

I bet you didn't realize that deep down in the confines of your cold and dark basement rest some beautiful objects. Ever hear the saying "one person's junk is another person's treasure?" Well, this may hold true when you learn to revive and restore old furniture. Taking that tired looking chair and turning it into a modern day marvel can take some time and effort, but it may just be worth it.

Romping around furniture stores and seeing what's out there gave me the idea that maybe what we have just isn't so bad, maybe it just needs some updating. I'm sure many of you have inherited a lamp or coffee table from your parents. You might have noticed the scrapes and scratches, might have even attempted to cover it up with tablecloths or lace. Sometimes it may take just a little cleaning and sometimes you may have to strip the furniture down to the basic wood and begin again. Either way, restoring and refinishing furniture can be a lot of fun and quite rewarding when you know what to do.

The first step is to move the object of choice into a well-ventilated, dry area. The fumes from the strippers, paint thinners and stains can be quite overwhelming. You might want to put on a mask if you are fume-sensitive. It is suggested that you wear goggles and gloves. Make sure to keep children and pets away from the area. When you are ready, remove all the hardware from the furniture – drawer handles, knobs, brackets – that can interfere with paint being removed and color being applied.

The next step is to apply a stripper. You need to decide which kind of stripper you want to use. Liquid stripper has a tendency to run on vertical surfaces, paste stripper requires that you keep it moist and gel stripper is a little more costly. Apply the stripper and let sit for the required amount of time. Check every few minutes by using a plastic scraper and gently scrape the paint surface. When it appears fairly easy to remove, it's time to go. Get into those hard-to-reach places by using steel wool (or burlap if you are working with oak) dipped in the stripper and go with the grain to remove the residue. Once the furniture looks good to go, feel the surface for any bumps and rough patches. Gently smooth them down using fine sandpaper. Apply turpentine or a wash as directed and let furniture dry.

It will generally take 24 hours or so for the furniture to completely dry. Check again for bumps, scrapes and unevenness in the texture and sand away any abnormalities. When the paint or stain is applied, rough patches and imperfections will really show up unless removed. Staining wood furniture is generally important after you strip and prepare it. If you don't the furniture will have the appearance of being uneven in color or blotchy. An exception to this is a clear finish over light-colored wood when you want to have a natural appearance. A good oil stain is fairly easy to use as it allows you to control the amount. Apply a stain that is a color or two darker than what you want the furniture to look. Stain is rapidly absorbed into the wood fibers, yet may require an additional coat, so you don't want to start out too dark.

Let the stain dry for the recommended amount of time and buff off. Is the color what you want it to be? If so, you are ready to apply the finish. Some recommended finishes include Linseed Oil, Shellac, Lacquer. Linseed oil is the finish of the "old time" furniture makers and takes a very long time to do. Shellac and Lacquer are easier finishes for the novice. Follow the directions carefully and make sure that you don't over or under apply. Let your furniture dry and update with cushions and pillows in modern fabrics. Once you've tackled a chair, a desk or table are within your reach. Restoring and refinishing furniture is addictive. You find yourself scouring garage sales and fairs for pieces that can be easily turned into exciting home furnishings with just a little TLC.

The contrast of the old and new makes for a room filled with warmth. Enjoy preserving memories of your family and their traditional heritage by turning that old battered piece into something decorative and useful for your family today.

A Porch for All Seasons

πFor many people, the screened-in-porch becomes obsolete as the weather dips below 40 degrees. It is generally turned into a storage place for chaises and miscellaneous furniture. It's fine with me if that's what you want to do, but there are other options.

Converting your screened-in porch takes a little time, effort, and money, but it is well worth it if you plan on utilizing the space in the off-season. By having your screens custom made with removable panels, you have the option of removing them in the cooler months and replacing them with custom Plexiglas windows.

The removable panels are held in place by small latches, which open and close, similar to the back of a picture frame. These latches can come in wood, plastic or even metal, depending on your preference. The plastic ones are inexpensive, do not swell in humidity or rain and do not rust.

In the warmer months, have both sets of panels made. That way, you will have access to the storm panels whenever you need them, whether it is September or November.

In addition to the small latches, a set of reinforcements should also be installed. These are made of a small strip of wood which will cover the latches. The strip is screwed into the wall frames of the windows and adds to the aesthetics of the porch by hiding the latches. They also add support. This is more important for the storm windows which will face harsh autumn storms and winter squalls. Something to note: the excess weight of the Plexiglas will cause your screen doors to sag a bit. They may drag and might not line up with the doorframe exactly.

Theoretically you won't be using the doors too often so it will not be an issue. If it is, speak to your contractor about the potential problem.

Having Plexiglas windows will not prevent the porch from getting cold. It will simply stop the wind and insulate any warmth that may be inside.

Bringing heat into a screened-in-porch can be tricky. The easiest, but least appealing way is to simply run extension cords everywhere and plug in hundreds of space-heaters. Not exactly safe, practical or attractive. A wood or coal-burning stove is a better option. It requires hardware and a little construction, but they work well. A nice antique, cast iron stove adds character to the room, but they are extremely heavy and not as efficient as modern versions. Newer stoves can produce a tremendous amount of heat, enough to keep the room warm on the coolest of days.

Have the stove installed by a professional. Make sure there is a chimney and the stove is placed on a fire-retardant platform, like slate. Do not light chimineas, propane heaters or any other outdoor fireplace inside. Since you've just sealed up all the windows, the smoke and gas fumes have no where to go and, more than likely, you will become asphyxiated and die. Not exactly a relaxing Sunday morning. If you are still in the construction phase of your screened-in-porch, look to have an actual fireplace installed. Not only will it look great and keep you warm in the winter, it's fantastic for cool summer nights before you change the screens.

The ability to utilize this space in the fall and winter is great for family dinners and holidays. The vast panes of glass will put you as close to being outside as you can get without wearing a coat. With Thanksgiving coming up, it would be wonderful to sit out on the screened-in porch enjoying both your family and the autumn foliage.

Changing the furniture cushions only adds to the experience. Wicker and rattan furniture can be used all year, but the chances are, you've got bright sunny colors on your cushions. An idea is to change them with the seasons. This does two things. First, it will keep the summer cushions in good shape for the summer and second it will allow you to customize the porch with warmer, softer colors in the colder months.

If you like the feel of being outdoors, but don't want to get out of your slippers and robe to do it, maybe winterizing your screened-in porch is the right idea for you.

A Step Up on Flooring

There are so many options in flooring to choose from today – rugs, sheet vinyl, vinyl tiles, ceramic, porcelain, marble, granite, cork, bamboo, etc. or the very popular classic look of hardwood floors.

You can get hardwood floors or the look of hardwood through a number of new options such as laminates (pergo-type), engineered wood, solid prefinished hardwood or traditional hardwood strips or planks customized to your preferences. There is something to match any budget and design preference.

Considering that a floor accounts for one third of the visual space of a room and usually one third of the decorating budget, it is an extremely important decision.

So, what is the difference in these wood floor products? Let's try to summarize the materials available.

Laminates: This is a vinyl product that can be installed as a floating floor (great to go over old flooring or cement). You can choose from pre-glued or glued at installation. This is usually an inexpensive flooring material option that can solve many existing floor problems. But remember you are getting a laminate floor which will always look like vinyl. If these floors scratch, you are scratching through vinyl and if damaged by water, it usually requires total replacement.

Engineered wood: These products are constructed of several thin veneers of wood glued on top of one another. Thus the cost of this material is less than that of solid wood products. The top layers are called the "wear layer." The thickness of this "wear layer" limits the ability to refinish the floor, repair it or change the color. After a few of these layers are removed, the lower layers of the product can be less than perfect. Before you buy, check how much wear layer the product has and how many times it can be refinished. Engineered wood does have advantages though, such as stability and installation versatility. It can be installed below grade in basements or other moisture prone areas. And, depending on the product chosen and the area of installation, it can be nailed, stapled, glued or floated. It tends to be slightly higher priced than a laminate floor, but less than a hardwood floor.

Cherry wood with oak diamond

Prefinished solid hardwood: This flooring is solid wood and comes pre-finished by the manufacturer. The 3/4 inch can be nailed to plywood or a wooden sub-floor just like an unfinished hardwood. Some manufacturers are making the product 3/8 inch thick rather than the normal 3/4 inch thickness of solid hardwood. The 3/8 inch can be glued to level concrete or used for areas that do not have sufficient clearance for the standard 3/4 inch. Care must be used during installation to avoid damaging the finish. If an accident happens during the lifetime of the product, there are touch up kits available from the manufacturer. Be warned, the touch up will never look like the original floor finish! But since this is solid hardwood, the floor can be re-sanded and refinished to repair it. The cost of this product includes the cost of the finishing done at the manufacturer. Therefore, you may actually pay more than traditional hardwood with a custom finishing.

Traditional hardwood with custom finishing: Raw wood prices are very competitive at this time and very often using this material is less expensive than paying for prefinished. There are many woods available such as Oak, Pine, Maple, Mahogany, Cherry, Distressed, Planking; the list goes on and on. During the finishing process, you can choose to leave it natural, use a custom stain color, bleach, pickle, or apply hand rubbed oil finish. Additionally, custom in-home finishing has been greatly improved with the use of "dustless equipment." If installed by a qualified contractor, it can even be installed with moisture barriers on concrete slabs. These floors last a lifetime and can be easily repaired or re-stained numerous times. Finally, they add increased value to your home. Wood flooring is a long-term investment. Remember all floors require care and can be scratched or damaged. So consider the ease of repairs and the value added to your home when you make your decision.

Today there are many choices for wood flooring or wood-look flooring as well as other materials. Check out all the options before making a purchase to choose the right one for your home.

Taking Chandelier Lighting by the Horns

Chandeliers have a long history that dates back to the Middle Ages. During the sixteenth century they could be found illuminating the cavernous interiors of medieval churches and abbeys across Europe. The first chandeliers in private homes hung only in the palaces and mansions of the very wealthy and powerful. These early chandeliers usually formed a wooden cross, or a more sophisticated ring or crown of bronze or brass, with metal points onto which wax candles were inserted. More modest households, with access to the raw materials for candle making, might have had chandeliers made from turned wood, bent metal, wrought iron, or tin sheet – the latter being a distinctive feature of lighting fixtures created during the pioneering days in America. Around that time, some enterprising person got the idea to create a chandelier from antlers, and they have become a favorite decorative piece ever since.

Antlers are the bony outgrowths that develop from, and are attached to, two protuberances called pedicles found on top of the skulls of male deer, elk, and moose. While this calcified tissue is growing, it is covered by a furry skin covering called velvet.

Eventually, the velvet dies, dries up, and peels away. Further removal of velvet from antlers occurs when the animal thrashes its antlers against trees and shrubs, which rubs off the velvet and polishes the antlers while staining them. The reduced daylight of winter, which diminishes testosterone production in the animal, causes the shedding of antlers. Mature males shed them in February/March, while younger males may retain theirs until May. New antlers begin to grow within days after old ones drop. The antlers are obtained by shed-horn gatherers whose objective is to find antlers of good shape, color, and appropriate size – all elements that are essential in creating a splendid looking fixture.

Antler chandeliers have graced the interiors of some of our country's most distinguished homes and businesses and embody a long tradition of being handcrafted by artisans who have strived to preserve the heritage of the American West. Real (not reproduction) antler chandeliers can be quite expensive. Chandeliers made from the antlers of white-tailed deer can sell from between $800 to $2,000. The larger elk chandeliers have sold for $4,000 and much higher. These chandeliers are becoming increasingly sought after by those looking to decorate their homes or cabins with a stunning piece that elegantly complements a warm, rustic feel.

The construction of an antler chandelier begins with selecting the right antler. The finest grade is the number one hard brown select antler. Unlike reproduction antlers, which can easily break because they are made of plastic, real antler is made from actual bone. Deer, elk, and moose shed these natural creations every year, supplying the market with an unlimited supply.

If you happen to be in the market for an antler chandelier, there are several things you need to look for when purchasing one. Obviously, the antler's size, shape, and color are important from an aesthetic point of view. But you should make certain that the entire fixture, not just the components, are UL approved in order to comply with US building codes and regulations.

All wiring, including the junction box, should be concealed in the center of the antler – no screws or wires should be visible. The antlers should be core drilled, wired, and screwed together so that the entire assembly is completely strong and durable. This should apply to chandeliers that are fitted with as few as four, or as many as fifteen lights. The best antler chandeliers come with an attractive light socket cover made from real antler. This conceals the fixture, preserving the natural appearance of the antler light right up to the bulb.

Many antler art companies will allow you to custom design your own chandelier. You can order antlers with adjustable light sockets and antique brass accessories. Antler light socket covers and various grades and finishes can also be furnished upon request. Most chandeliers come with 6 feet of chain and seven feet of wire, but you should inform the company of the exact lengths you'll need when you place your order.

Antler chandeliers will make an elegant contribution to your home's décor. And it will provide you with a taste of our rustic heritage that everyone can enjoy. If you are interested in learning more about antler chandeliers, or if you would like to purchase one for your home, please visit www.horns-a-plenty.com or www.antlerworx.com.

Thermography: Finding Hot Spots in Your Home

What is Infrared Testing and why is it good for you? There is an old saying, "What you don't know can't hurt you." In this case, what you don't know or can't see may burn your house down. In your electrical panel there could be many different hazards that can cause a fire and you wouldn't even know it. Many times the electrician or home inspector wouldn't see any problem, but the infrared camera can. Infrared cameras work on the same principle as night vision apparatuses. Instead of looking for people crossing the border, thermographers (that's what infrared testers are called) look for hot spots in your electrical panel. Some of the things we find are faulty fuses or circuit breakers, loose connections, overloaded circuits, and circuit deterioration caused by our environment, so close to the salt water. Without the use of hi-tech infrared imaging, many of these problems go undetected until disaster strikes.

Just last week it was reported in the news that a smoky fire caused extreme damage to the home of Thomas Young of Shelter Island. The fire was thought to have begun at the point where "an electrical cable entered the house."

Infrared Testing of the electrical installation and equipment should be performed by qualified and trained personnel, who have an understanding of infrared technology and are capable of accurately interpreting the results of the testing. Infrared testing is an ideal technique for inspecting electrical equipment for defective components or connections. Normal wear, vibration, corrosion, fatigue, and faulty assembly or installation may lower the conductivity and increase the resistance level of a connection or component. This increase in resistance will cause an increase in temperature. Excessive heat and a rise in temperature can be readily noted and measured by the infrared camera. Increased temperatures indicate potential trouble spots that could lead to failure of the component. Inspections are advantageous in situations where electrical equipment cannot be taken out of service. Infrared inspections can be accurate, reliable and expedient in a variety of electrical installations. Infrared testing can be relatively inexpensive, when you consider the saving often realized by preventing equipment damage and electrical interruptions. Any problems found should be repaired immediately by a licensed master electrician.

Infrared inspection programs have proven that, on average, for every dollar spent on infrared electrical inspections, there is a four dollar return on the investment for labor and materials from fixing the problem before it fails

Quite a few customers have already benefited from having their electrical panels tested. We have had cases where there was aluminum cable in the house, and the customer couldn't believe how hot it got when the appliance it had been connected to was turned on. You could visually see the cable glow. But you couldn't see that without the infrared camera. Another customer had problems with a breaker feeling hot. The last electrician they used overloaded the circuit instead of installing a new one.

Too Much Rain? Build an Ark!

A few weeks ago, after it had rained for about ten days and ten nights, I started to wonder whether it was too late to build an ark. And even if I had time, could I really start collecting two of everything? The thing is, I really don't know at what point rain in the Hamptons can be so intense that it would completely flood over the entirety of the East End, but I do hope that someone up there (or, more likely in my case, down there) will warn me if the threat is upon us. Whatever the future holds, I think it would behoove all of us to start building our own arks. Here's a how-to.

Before I begin, though, I feel that I should offer an explanation about where my instructions come from. After all, during the course of most endeavors, many people are perfectly pleased to voice an opinion on how to do just about anything. I bet if you went around to all of the marinas in the Hamptons and asked people how to build an ark, you would get lots of answers. But given the intensity of the rain we have had this autumn, I felt it important to go directly to the source for the original ark. While these instructions may be old, they seem to have worked quite well back in the day, thank God.

1. Make thee an ark of gopher wood; rooms shalt thou make in the ark, and shalt pitch it within and without with pitch.

2. And this is the fashion which thou shalt make it of: the length of the ark shall be three hundred cubits, the breadth of it fifty cubits, and the height of it thirty cubits.

3. A window shalt thou make to the ark, and in a cubit shalt thou finish it above; and the door of the ark shalt thou set in the side thereof; with lower, second, and third stories shalt thou make it.

A question arises from the outset: what shape is the ark? In one translation, I have seen the word "coffer" used, which suggests a floating dock – in this case, one with walls and a ceiling. Given that the term ark is also used to describe the chest in which the Ten Commandments were held – itself a coffer, in the more modern sense – I think it wise to assume that the ark was intended to be a raft with walls and ceiling, rather than a boat with a traditional hull.

No one knows what gopher wood is, but some have suggested that Cypress trees were intended, while others believe that the correct transliteration is "kopher wood", which would mean any tree covered in bitumen. Today bitumen has a more complicated meaning but at the time it seemed to be any mineral pitch (pitch being sap of a tree). To cut through all this, I suggest that you use any water-resistant wood, but do take heed of your clearing limits if you intend to use your own trees.

It is clear that we are meant to use sap (pitch) to seal in the spaces between logs. However, no direction is given on how the trees are to be tied together. I suspect any strong rope used in the shipping industry should be appropriate; I am sure Home Depot can recommend something. Because of the rain, the door is wisely placed on the side rather than the front. On the other hand, some light and ventilation is needed, so there is a small window on the top.

You will have to decide for yourself how many rooms to make in your ark. My ark will not be made available to two members of each and every species – even just those species living in the Hamptons. Rather, my dog Pete and I shall invite select people and animals, including piping plovers and certain people from non-traditional families. Thus, my ark will have fewer rooms than would be required of one who intends to save all the species.

Now, I suspect that few readers have a cubit-based ruler. Unfortunately, a cubit is a loosely defined measurement describing the length of the forearm, from the elbow all the way to the tip of the middle finger. My own personal cubit measurement is 18 inches, which means my ark will be 5400 inches by 900 inches by 540 inches, or 450 feet long by 75 feet wide 45 feet high. Because we are directed that the ark shall be divided into three stories, each story will be 15 feet high, which is quite lovely even by modern standards, except for certain male giraffes. Your ark may have slightly different measurements.

Incidentally, each story of my ark will have 33,750 square feet of floor space. To put this into perspective, Ira Rennert's mansion in Sagaponack is 42,000 in its entirety. Perhaps he will let me build a dock for my ark off the beach in front of his home.

Then there was a small business customer who wanted an infrared test done on their electrical panel just as a preventative measure. The panel looked nice to the naked eye, but the infrared panel showed it had a hot spot. The last person who worked on the circuit didn't land the wire under the screw in the breaker. The wire had been visibly heating up. But, thanks to our survey, they were able to catch the problem before it turned into a catastrophe.

Infrared testing has been around for over twenty years. It has mostly been done in hospitals where keeping electricity on and safe is non-negotiable. They use a maintenance program with a particular company that is certified to do thermography. Now this service is affordable to you. Homes on Long Island are especially susceptible to corrosion and faulty wiring. Recently most of us have been affected by the rain and flooding. Water may have been pouring out of your electric panel, or the basement was totally under water. These are very hazardous conditions. Electric outlets and wiring may have been totally submerged. The integrity of the electrical wires and connections now start to break down and possibly need replacement, especially being exposed to the salt water and salt air. The infrared camera will pick this up immediately showing hot spots from corrosion and rust.

With the holidays coming upon us quickly, with the use of extra lights and decorations, this may only compound the problem. When more things are added to a circuit that may already be damaged, the potential for a fire is greatly increased.

For peace of mind before the holidays, let Access Thermography Services come and survey the electric in your home to see how safe it actually is. You can visit them on their website at www.accessthermographyservices.com or call and make an appointment today at 631-218-1660.

The Better Bedroom Theater

As the holidays approach we have many things on our minds– finding that special gift for that certain someone and readying our homes for holiday entertaining are on the top of our lists.

As we make the transition from summer to fall/winter décor, there are many new technological advances that we might want to purchase, but often the high tech equipment clashes with our décor. That plasma TV would be a great gift for a spouse (and self), but how would all that equipment, with its wiring and connections, look in the traditional or even in a modern bedroom?

Homeowners can now have the best of both worlds with custom-made cabinetry from Cabinet Tronix. Their elegant, high-end bedroom furniture totally conceals, and then reveals, home entertainment equipment. The Private Vision Sleepers Line of beautifully designed wooden cabinetry hides a large flat panel plasma (or LCD) TV, a high-performance digital sound system, DVD player and more, all located right at the foot of your bed!

Promising entertainment anytime of the day or night from the comfort of the bedroom, their furniture uncovers all its secrets at the simple push of the remote. Just push the button and a motorized lift raises the plasma or LCD flat panel screen from a hidden opening in the bed's footboard. Once raised, you can twist and rotate the screen 180 degrees in each direction at the touch of a button, ensuring the optimal viewing experience from the bed and/or the sitting area. What a delight! When not in use, the lift quickly lowers the large screen tastefully out-of-sight.

Cabinet Tronix bedroom sets are built by skilled artisans and deliver the quality and beauty of the finest Old World craftsmanship. Only state-of-the-art TV and audio/digital electronics are utilized. And Cabinet Tronix furniture conceals the cabling, speakers, wiring, and all associated electronic gadgetry that ordinarily leaves a tangle of unsightly wires.

Bedroom furniture is only part of their line of automated all-in-one "pop up" plasma TV furniture. Featured in Newsweek and a host of other publications, Cabinet Tronix was dubbed "The Ferrari" of plasma furniture and quickly became the sought-after supplier for the discerning high-end consumer.

Hallmarks of their work are fine craftsmanship, technological prowess and absolute ease of use. All of their units – which include more than 50 styles of exquisitely crafted cabinets, buffets and chests – arrive fully assembled and ready to plug-and-play.

The furniture will soon be making a splash at The Residences at MGM Grand – a luxury condominium Hotel by Turnberry in Las Vegas that has ordered Cabinet Tronix plasma units for all its 540 suites.

For the ultimate gift for yourself, the complete bedroom package includes the headboard, foot board (with lift system), bed rails, two matching nightstands and custom finish. The electronics include an automated swivel which rotates the television 200 degrees in each direction, an HDMI DVD player, digital Universal remote, Infra red Repeater and a 32 inch-Sharp HD LCD with speakers, along with a component section to hold the DVD and cable box. The sets can also be custom built to your specifications.

The Private Vision Sleepers line complete packages range from $17,500 to $35,000. Cabinet Tronix also has an array of 50-plus furniture styles to choose from, ranging from hand-carved Old World styling to modern chic creations. Their elegant, stylish furniture can be found in luxury homes across the United States.

Enjoy the holidays every day by treating yourself to the finest in home entertainment.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

I'm simply captivated by the big, beautiful, billowy snow-white heads of cauliflower currently on local farm stands. Cauliflower is truly a flower; instead of opening outward, the flower forms a compact, edible mass of "florets" surrounded by crisp green leaves circling the head. When purchasing cauliflower be sure they have dense white florets that are firmly packed together. A head that has bruises and has begun to loosen should be avoided.

Although you will have white cauliflower in Milan, green cauliflower in Rome, purple cauliflower in Catania (Italy) and giant cauliflower in Naples, and subtypes in France, Holland and Algeria, it is the Long Island cauliflower that spurs my imagination. Wherever else it is growing the cauliflower has been grown on Long Island since the seventeenth century. That's all I need to know.

If a full head of cauliflower is too much for one meal, trim all the florets, then rinse and blanch them. The briefly cooked florets may be refrigerated, covered in a suitable container and stored for a day or two to finish in a variety of cooking procedures. Cauliflower with a mustardy mayonnaise makes a delightful fall side dish, tiny florets of raw cauliflower with tarragon vinaigrette is one of my favorite fall salads, and Jacques Pepin's cauliflower with scallions and roasted sesame oil from his ce lebrated cookbook Fast Food My Way, Houghton Mifflin, 2004, has the simplicity we desire with the taste of today.

CAULIFLOWER AND TARRAGON SALAD

This delicious raw vegetable salad makes the best use of a fresh ingredient. Prepare up to one day ahead for flavors to develop and serve as a first course salad.

Serves 6

2 cups cauliflorettes
1/2 teaspoon coarse salt or to taste
2 tablespoons snipped fresh tarragon leaves
1 1/2-2 tablespoons lemon juice
3 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil

1. Cut off the base of the cauliflower and remove the leaves. Pull off the flowerets starting at the base and set aside. Use the smallest flowerets available for the recipe. (Use remaining cauliflower in a soup, for pasta, risotto, etc.) When you have approximately 2 cups of small florets put them in a bowl of cold water and soak for 15 minutes. Drain, and then pat dry in a clean kitchen towel.

2. With a small paring knife, cut tiny florets from each piece as necessary. The "curd" at the top of the head is tiny and graduate to chunky "curds" at the lower portion of the head. The cauliflorettes should be no bigger than 1/2 inch in diameter.

3. Transfer florets to a mixing bowl. Add the salt and tarragon and rotate bowl while stirring to mix. Add lemon juice and mix gently; then add oil and stir carefully until ingredients are thoroughly mixed. Serve as an appetizer or first course salad. If preparing ahead, refrigerate in a suitable container and bring to room temperature before serving.

CAULIFLOWER WITH MUSTARD MAYONNAISE

Serves 6-8

1 fresh, snow white cauliflower, about 2 1/2 pounds
1 cup mayonnaise
1/2 cup sour cream
1 teaspoon Dijon mustard
1 teaspoon finely chopped shallots
Coarse (kosher) salt to taste and freshly ground pepper
1 large carrot, scraped and shredded
Dash cayenne
Few sprigs curly parsley for garnish

1. Wash cauliflower, trim off the leaves, and leave whole. If necessary, use a sharp knife to cut into the core at the base of the cauliflower so that it can sit comfortably on the center post of a steamer rack. Try not to let cauliflower break up into florets.

2. Steam over briskly simmering water in a tightly closed pan 8-10 minutes until tender but firm. Drain and pat dry with paper towels. Transfer to a serving dish.

3. In a mixing bowl, combine mayonnaise with sour cream, mustard, shallots, salt, pepper, and cayenne. Stir to mix. Taste to adjust seasoning if necessary.

4. Shred carrot on large holes of stand-up grater or grate in a food processor fitted with shredding blade. If using processor, cut carrot in lengths to fit the feed tube horizontally. Process with full pressure to obtain large shreds. Fold approximately 2/3 of shredded carrot into prepared dressing. Set aside remaining shredded carrot for garnish. Can be prepared up to one day ahead, refrigerate covered in a suitable container.

5. Spoon dressing in a crisscross design over top of the cooked cauliflower, allowing sauce to fall to the rim of the plate. Sprinkle top with remaining carrot shreds and dash of cayenne. Garnish with sprigs of curly parsley.

Adapted from Silvia Lehrer's Cooking at Cooktique, Doubleday, 1985.

CAULIFLOWER WITH SCALLIONS AND SESAME OIL

4 servings

1 firm, white cauliflower head (about 1 1/2 pounds), trimmed of any green leaves
1/4 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
1 tablespoon peanut oil
2 teaspoons dark (Asian) sesame oil
1/3 cut finely minced scallions

1. Divide the cauliflower into 12 to 14 florets. Bring about 1/2 inch water to a boil in a stainless steel saucepan and add the florets. Cover and cook over high heat for 8 to 10 minutes, until the cauliflower is tender but still firm. There should be almost no water remaining in the pan.

2. Transfer the florets to a serving bowl and immediately add the remaining ingredients. Toss gently to coat the cauliflower and serve immediately.

Dining in the Hamptons

Annona

112 Riverhead Road
Westhampton Beach

The concept is rather brilliant: the finest in food paired with the finest in automobiles. You may drive past Annona and Manhattan Motorcars, and, while your eyes try to absorb the several million dollars worth of automobiles in the show room, not realize that there is a restaurant on the second floor, a wonderful restaurant at that. Annona, named after the Roman goddess of the harvest, strives to use only fresh local produce in its wildly inventive dishes.

I arrived slightly earlier than my friend and associate food critic, Julia, and I elected to take a seat at the bar. The restaurant was filled with warm lighting, oil paintings, several tables arranged with spacing in mind. From the dining room there is no reference to the Rolls Royces, Ferarris, and Lotuses below. The bar, on the other hand, takes full advantage of Motorcars with a balcony actually overlooking the showroom.

When Julia arrived, we were seated at a booth looking out to the dining room. We spent some time examining the menu, which had interesting dishes created by executive chef Sarah Jenkins like Pappardelle with wild boar ragu, Wood Oven-Roasted Dry Aged Rib-Eye for two, and Local Striped Bass with Umbrian lentils and shaved carrot salad. Our server, Liz, was wonderful at making suggestions and answering questions.

She recommended anything that is cooked in the wood burning oven and added that the pumpkin ravioli was a personal favorite of hers. There is one dish on the menu that always seems to draw attention and the obvious question, "Does a blue footed chicken really have blue feet?" The answer is yes, although they do not serve the chicken with the feet anymore, unless you request it, which had slipped my mind when ordering.

Deciding it was best to have the wines paired for us, Pietro Bottero, Anonna's manager, presented us with a Vermintino Tyrsos 2003 Contini in preparation for our first course, one of the evening's specials, Wood Oven Roasted Bay Scallops served with snail butter, lemon and radish salad. The bay scallops were astonishingly tender and had a nice light flavor when eaten alone, but when combined with the radish salad, the meal took on an interesting layered quality of sweet and tangy that worked very nicely.

Seeing the fried chicken liver on the menu struck my curiosity, and for the second course I was up for the challenge. Julia, following with Liz's recommendation, chose the pumpkin ravioli. Our meals were paired with a 2001 Brindisi Rosso Vallone. The liver was fried in a light, almost-tempura batter and served on a bed of frisee. Once again the effect was layered. I was first met with the light crispness of the batter and then the flavor transitioned into the deeper stronger taste of the chicken liver. The ravioli was browned in butter and sage. The portion was quite a nice size, enough for me to sample a few, which were practically bursting with the mashed pumpkin filling.

We had a small portion of Risotto crema di scampi. It was so rich and flavorful that I could have been very happy to spend the rest of the evening eating the shrimp-based risotto and sipping on 'Ferran' Petrilli Pugua, but when the main courses arrived I was glad I hadn't. Julia had chosen the Halibut with bacon and Brussels sprouts. Normally I'm not one to eat Brussels sprouts because of their sharpness, but the combination worked rather well, the flavors complemented each other in a subtle, but definite way. The Blue Foot Chicken (sans the blue feet) was seasoned to perfection. Its meat was juicy and tender. Although the bird is raised as a free-range fowl it is anything but gamey. It was served on a bed of cranberry beans and wilted escarole. Once again the wine pairing of Pinot Blanco Gries was spot on.

We finished off the meal with a warm Concord Grape bread pudding served with a scoop of rum walnut gelato. The grape flavor was intense, but muted by the set off with the rum walnut gelato. Julia had the rice pudding tart with strawberry jam. We also had a third dessert to share. Panna Cotta is a simple vanilla custard whipped into a very light consistency which deceivingly carries a great deal of taste. To go along with dessert, Pietro poured us Fragolino, a lemonchello-like drink made in house from local North Fork strawberries, vodka and sugar. Its intense sweetness and strawberry flavor made it a great drink to sip throughout dessert.

With inventive dishes, a great staff and a magnificent wine cellar, it's no wonder that Anonna has already made a name for itself.

JUST FOR KIDS

EAST END KID APPLE -PICKING TIME

BY EMILY HART POST
WITH A LITTLE HELP FROM KATLEAN DE MONCHY AND DAVID POST

It was my dad's birthday and he chose as his special gift to go with the class and other parents to Congers, New York (in Rockland County) to pick apples on our day trip. We met at school then jumped on the bus and we wound up in the last row and wow, was that bumpy. When we got to the farm, we had a snack that was brought for us. Then we went on a truck to find our own pumpkin to take home. I took a small one, as it was easier to carry. Then I found a green tomato to also take home. Then we started our apple picking time, choosing apples from up in the trees. Many of the apples were of different varieties. Yes, we did taste some of them. Yummy! Then we carried our apples back to the bus – well, actually the dads did because the bags were too heavy. Then we had lunch and some games, then back into the bus for the ride home. There was a big surprise – half way home, the teachers, the parents and us kids all sang Happy Birthday to my dad and he didn't have to announce how old he was or give a speech. Us kids are easy to work with!

When In Manhattan... BY OLIVER PETERSON

Dog Days

I spend an inordinate amount of time with my Bichon Frise, Lucy. She comes with me to my day job, she's by my side at home, rides shotgun in the car, and she sleeps with my wife and me at night. Well, she lies there until I fall asleep and then usually ditches the bed – it upsets me, but I think I might be smothering her, literally and figuratively. Earlier today we strolled around East Hampton with my wife and Lucy's cousin, Lilly, who is visiting for the week. Although Sag Harbor is my preferred town, East Hampton clearly wins the prize for the most dog-friendly town in the Hamptons. Canines are welcome in just about every store, and the diverse doggy social network is at times overwhelming. Simply put, there are dogs everywhere. It's a wonderful thing. Humans meet in the street and remember the names of one another's pets before they would consider learning those of the owners.

On a summer afternoon out here, we see that with our many visitors comes a plethora of pooches enjoying their vacation on the beach as much as their owners. The pups love it out here, but they're home most of the year. And as far as big cities go, Manhattan isn't a bad place to be.

With these things in mind, and as I fondly look upon little Lucy sleeping on the couch next to me, I realize that the Manhattan dog scene needs addressing. East Hampton may be a great town for our four-legged friends, but New York is rife with great stuff built around the animals we love.

The mother of all dog shows, The Westminster Kennel Club Dog Show is going into its 130th year, and as usual, it will be held at Madison Square Garden in February. It's a few months away but remains a prime example of New York's passion for pets. From now until then, you might want to take advantage of some of the other fun things our favorite city has to offer you and your best friend.

On your next trip, make plans to bring him or her along. The chaos takes getting used to, but the benefits are real. Off the bat, I can name nine public dog runs you can visit. Where you go obviously depends on where you hang out. Dogs are only permitted off their leash between the hours of 9 p.m. and 9 a.m in the city parks, but for our convenience, fenced "runs" are set up so Fido can meet and play with his friends. Frequenters of the runs create relationships with other dog owners while the dogs bond. If you have a dog, you can probably relate with parallels to parents discussing their children at the playground. The runs are especially good if your pet – that would be you, Lucy – tends to take off in open spaces. The enclosed area removes the worry of a long and harrowing search-and-rescue following the appearance of an attractive squirrel. From the Tompkins Square run in the East Village, and Fish Bridge between Pearl and Water, to Carl Schurz on East End at 86th and DeWitt Clinton Park between 10th and 11th Avenues at 52nd and 54th, the owners, neighborhoods and dogs make for an excellently varied experience.

When you're ready for lunch or a coffee, there are a few establishments that will actually let you and your pal inside. Grey Dog's Coffee on Carmine Street (west of 6th Ave.) is said to pay off health inspectors investigating dog complaints. If you've got a barker – yes, you again, Lucy – just know ahead of time that one bark receives a warning, and two will earn an ejection. On 9th Street and 2nd Avenue, MUD welcomes dogs into the restaurant and the rear garden. For obvious reasons, the food preparation area is off limits. Also check out Cafe Café on Greene Street, in Soho.

As night rolls in, don't fret. Quite a few bars happily accept dogs. Downtown dives are a sure bet, but also check out DBA (also downtown) on First Ave, and Chumley's on Bedford.

Beyond all of these places, search the net or local listings for hundreds of boutiques and services to pamper your pooch. If you're anything like me, and love your dog like I love Lucy, it's a real treat to bring them along.

Take a Hike with Ken Kindler

Shelter Island

Summer may be a fading memory, but autumn is one of the best times to plan a trip "out east." When my wife and I decided to book a room on Shelter Island for an overnight vacation, we found that during the colder months, some hotels close down; the ones that stay open charge lower rates and are not crowded.

October 16 was a sunny day; the temperature was in the sixties. We left early and drove up the north side of the South Fork visiting the Morton National Wildlife Preserve on our way to the ferry. To get to Shelter Island we took Noyac Road east to Noyac Long Beach Road, to Route 114, then north to the South Ferry. The entrance to the refuge is located on Noyac Road between Deerfield and Millstone Roads, directly across from the Noyac Golf Club.

It was a perfect day, yet there were only a few other people at the refuge. As you enter the loop trail, walk slowly and you will hear chickadees call to you from the thickets. Stand still with a few unsalted sunflower seeds in your palm, hold your hand out, and be patient. We were careful not to drop any seeds on the trail so as not to overfeed the birds or attract rats. We took a right turn off the beach trail onto the short loop trail; another right took us to the beach. The fences to protect the nesting plovers had been removed for the winter so we were able to walk along Peconic Bay up Jessup Neck. Instead of walking the 1.75 miles to the tip of the peninsula we decided to head for the ferry. There was no line for the ferry, and in a few minutes we were on Shelter Island. The few other drivers we did encounter on the roads were courteous and driving at a mellow 35 m.p.h.

When we arrived at the hotel, the lobby was empty and the man at the check-in gave us his undivided attention. The next morning when we came downstairs for breakfast there was only one other couple in the dining area. In the lobby of the hotel we found an excellent complimentary map and brochure produced by the Shelter Island Chamber of Commerce (visit www.shelter-island.net). When we asked the fellow at the check-in desk for a beach where I could swim and my wife could walk he suggested Upper Beach (also known as Hay Beach) on the northern part of the island, at the end of Menhadden Lane. The shoreline is amazingly undisturbed. The view of Gardiner's Bay is incredible. You can see the Orient Point lighthouse to the northeast and several small verdant islands to the southeast. An osprey who had not yet headed south was circling overhead; a loon came quite close and swam with me for a bit.

We got back on Route 114 and headed south to the Nature Conservancy's Mashomack Preserve. The preserve is closed on Tuesdays, but all other days it is open from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. during the winter and until 5 p.m. in the summer. The parking lot was empty except for staff vehicles. There is a sign-in book and a suggested donation of $2 per visitor. At the Visitors' Center we picked up the excellent complimentary guide map and brochures. Before setting out to walk, we utilized the environmentally-friendly restroom facilities. Near the Visitor Center there is a 1-mile wheelchair and stroller-friendly trail. Complimentary strollers and wheelchairs are provided. The ruts in this trail show that the Nature Conservancy still has some work to do to make this trail fully wheelchair accessible. They are presently investigating different methods for stabilizing the tread of this trail. The many interpretive signs along the trails provide educational information. This area of 2,100 acres is an unspoiled place; it is easy to spend an entire day walking the trails. From the Red Trail, we saw two (yet to migrate) great egrets, flying over Miss Annie's Creek. There are three easy to follow, consecutive loops; 1.5 miles, 3 miles, or 11 miles.

During fall weekends the North Fork is crowded but this was Monday, so we decided to head back on the ferry to Greenport taking the North Fork up-island to visit the vineyards and farmstands on our way home.

We experienced the best that the East End has to offer without the crowds. Get out and enjoy this "off" season!

Classic Cars with Bob Gelber

In 1876, legislation was introduced in Congress to close the U.S. Patent Office. The reason? Everything that could possibly have been invented had already been materialized and we needed to go no further. This information made me realize that one, some elected officials of the past were just as clueless as they are now, and two, this ludicrous legislation points to the fact, that, even in the 19th century, people already thought that the world was becoming too complex.

Take today's automobiles. They have really become high tech pieces of machinery. Not too long ago, they were basically simple machines, with a ladder chassis, solid rear suspensions, and engines one could recognize as engines when a car's hood was opened. I kid you not when I say that recently I looked under the hood of a new car to see what kind of power it had. With all the plumbing, and silly plastic "deco" panels hiding the engine, I couldn't even tell how many cylinders there were. Nowhere to be seen were the spark plug wires or the oil filter.

When ABS (anti-lock braking system) brakes first appeared on cars in the early eighties, I thought this would be a boon to safety. They allowed one to steer a car while it was in a skid, as well as improving stopping distances during a panic stop. It was quite a complicated system, but a giant leap forward in automotive safety. It had been used in jetplanes for decades, because the last thing a jet pilot needs is to go into a skid when landing at the average speed of 140 miles per hour. Today, some of the same sensors that are used for the ABS have several other functions, such as traction control and stability control, which is quite common on many of the upper priced machinery.

The simple braking system that once consisted of just six little hydraulic cylinders and a quart of brake fluid has morphed into a system that could even baffle a space shuttle engineer. These safety devices are just one of the many reasons new cars cost so much.

Another automotive system that has gone bonkers in complexity is the fuel delivery system, commonly called fuel injection. Again, first used in airplanes, mainly to prevent icing up at high altitudes, it found its way into use in a production car in the 1954 Mercedes Benz 300SL Gullwing coupe. Initially, it was a mechanical system, which was quite troublesome in the 300SL as well as some early systems in Chevrolet Corvettes. I distinctly remember being given a Mercedes press car with an early fuel injection system. It was a cold day in winter when I went out to start it. It had trouble starting, and since this was one of the first fuel injected cars I had ever driven, I started to pump the throttle like I was used to doing in a carburatored car. Well, this thing started coughing, spitting and smoking in a most un-Mercedes-like fashion. I stopped pumping the gas pedal, and eventually the car settled down and started running smooth. I relayed this experience to Mercedes when I returned the car to them. Two days later they called me and, to my surprise, told me they took apart the engine to see what went wrong. Mercedes was that kind of company.

Mercedes 300 SL

Today, all fuel injection systems are electronic and marvels of dependability. But, and it's a big "but," if anything goes wrong with them, they are very expensive and complicated to repair. A simple airflow meter can cost $500 and up. (This is a weak spot in the system.) Also, out of work rocket scientists have been known to find jobs at fuel injection repair shops. I have to admit that I do miss the simple old-fashioned carburator that most of the time could be fixed with a screwdriver. Also, the old Italian Weber carburator or American Holly carb could be purchased for around two hundred bucks. These were the entire fuel delivery systems and considered the best in the world. Again, this is another reason new cars are so expensive.

Then, of course, we have accessories. Air conditioning is the norm, but climate control drives me crazy. I will not have a car that tells me if my environment is too hot or cold. My favorite system is one you can override, to at least have some control of your life inside your fancy car. Then we have this new satellite radio system. I don't know about you, but I balk about paying Cablevision fees every month, much less paying another several bucks a month to listen to a radio. Unless you have a compulsion to listen to Elvis or Sinatra while you drive. Get a life.

I like cruise control, especially on long trips, and it's not even that complicated. Airbags are good because they save lives, and thankfully I've never had one go off in my face, although I have thought that experience would probably shake me up more than the accident.

I will say this. Recently, ABS brakes and faultless handling saved me from a very serious accident, which made me realize that cars have gotten insanely complicated, but boy, have they gotten better.

Kiss Kiss, Bang Bang

I'd rather swallow a chair than admit that I raucously enjoyed the splashy, noir-comedy, killer-thriller Kiss Kiss, Bang Bang. I must be honest because the chair-swallowing simile was uttered by Abraham Lincoln. Likewise, the title Kiss Kiss, Bang Bang is attributed to the tip top film reviewer, Pauline Kael – her pertinent description of motion pictures' primary attractions. However, KK, BB has much more going for it than those two smacking good components. It speaks with the easy-oozy rapidity of an automatic weapon spraying penetrating entertainment power. Puncturing dialogue is loaded by the veteran screenwriter Shane Black, well-known for high grossing movies such as Lethal Weapon. Now, the well-decorated scripter Big Gun takes official leadership as director and similarly comes out as a big hitter in flashy action, constrained by wit and out-smarting enjoyments. He utilizes two lead role performances that rock their known capabilities to heroic proportions and a titillating scenario that pushes the ten cent pulp novel into a bright-light redo gleaming with fresh, trenchant, detective trench coat same-olds.

Looking and acting as sparkling as if having spent six months at the Betty Ford Clinic, Robert Downey, Jr. and Val Kilmer shine with new-found verve and bite to their acting chops. Downey plays Harry Lockhart, a small-time thief who, when running from New York policemen, is mistaken for an actor auditioning for a detective flick. Typecasting works, so he is flown to Hollywood for screen tests and practices the role of Private Eye by following in the gumshoe steps of a flamingly macho private detective Gay Perry who is strong, acerbic, and gay with no excuses. Val Kilmer, as the gay, outed cop, manages a performance that escapes all offensiveness for a change. Kilmer's gay "technical adviser" to Downey's hustler/wannabe actor's role in the Hollywood crime movie screws wildly into a farce of screw-ball proportions exceeded only by the cleverness of a plot as shaggy as Downey's hairdo. KK, BB's feverish cinematic mix of violence and fun features edgy editing, shaking up chronology and an innovative on-screen narration which boosts the film's enjoyment the way turning up the volume knob increases your stereo's loudness.

What's the story, you ask? I guess style and improvisation are not enough. If you feel that way, than you ain't gonna get much more than: Harry and Gay Perry shoot one-liners, tough guyisms, conundrums and jokes at each other with glib fired emotions. The pot shots later nick the ears of Harry's old Indiana girlfriend Harmony, who shares the love of splintery pulp convolutions, and becomes involved in their twisty, complicated criminal investigating that shares a lot in common with one of her favorite detective novels featuring the fictional private eye Jonny Gossamer. The L.A. underworld is once again turned over, but little is actually uncovered except seamy goings-on. Emotions run high as the writer/director Black swishpans from one hectic scene to another. One somewhat related criminality involves child sexual abuse, but doesn't really fit in a fiendishly slick movie. Some may claim that Michelle Monaghan as Downey's love interest, Harmony is too young. How can anyone be too young for a movie as blatantly juvenile as Kiss Kiss, Bang Bang. Hey, what's wrong with a movie that has a lot of violence, nudity, and obscenity Bang Bang, when it has so much Kiss Kiss lovey-dovey affection for movie making?

Mr. Downey and Mr. Kilmer are not to be judged for whatever off-screen peccadillos they may be famous for. Some may have been dillies, but go take a look at how nicely they percolate in KK, BB. Downey hasn't been better than the thug turned actor turned sleuth. No mystery that Kilmer has emerged from Batman's dark lair to get deliberate laughs.

I don't have to swallow my pride or a chair, I enjoyed Kiss Kiss, Bang Bang. Who cares if it is totally irrelevant.

MASQUERADE

The presentation of Dan's Papers' "They Made The Movie Here" FREE Film Festival continues to warm up the Ross School auditorium where, at 2 p.m. on Saturdays, films bearing the likeness of our photogenic neighborhoods ignite the screen. How about that? They include dramas, comedies, mysteries, you name it, we got it. A whole lot! And they reek of our Island's ambiance. And, it all comes as a FREE GIFT (to borrow the advertising redundancy).

This week's movie is Masquerade, a romantic suspense thriller and kissy-kissy-poo fun. The title Masquerade is another grammatical discrepancy because, though it covers veiled identities, it also (in more advertising jargon) lays bare wicked, wretched lives and naked tanned bodies, looking very blush-plush, especially as displayed against the florid backgrounds of flush Southampton estates and lush John Barry music. Even Shelter Island looks kind of like Florida.

It's a splashy mix of swanky yacht racing and nasty poor-boy competitions to get the poor little rich girl and her liquid funds. It unzips passion and defrocks vulgarities to clobber and distance itself from its relationship to the gentility of Alfred Hitchcock's 1941 Suspicion, starring Cary Grant as the handsome lug who loves his wife, but, oh, that dowry.

The 1985 Masquerade gives us the handsome baby–face Rob Lowe, looking premature as the most knowledgeable and best boating captain and lover on the East Coast. Arriving in the Hamptons under the cloud of a shady past, seaman Lowe quickly has women going overboard for him. There's the yacht owner's wife who likes him buck-naked, for her eyes only (and, of course the movie audience). Kim Cattrall portrays her without flinching when using naughty words and therefore, can get things off her chest easily, especially articles of clothing. Many other women's eyes turn to Rob's butt, but he turns to the young orphan with millions and a greedy, live-in step-father, and a local policeman who's loved her for years. Meg Tilly is the young love-starved lady and is tearfully spunky and believable.

From this point on the movie has more twists than a raspberry Twizzler and can get stretched even thinner. But, cloyingly sweet, thin, or twisting itself into self-demolishing turns, it does take hold of you and push you into many surprises, what with yachting, talk of faulty propane hoses, sex, terms of the will spelled out, sex, evil conniving (in Amagansett's lunch diner, yet!), more sex, murder, marriage, suicide?, a red Ferrari, and so on.

The director, Bob Swain, and screenwriter, Dick Wolf, were not very interested in the psychological character probing that gave depth to Hitchcock's glossy pictures. Masquerade is polished but not reflective. Even the Hamptons look too fingerprintless. Pretty polishing dulls the sharp jaggedness this kind of movie should have. For instance, John Barry's opulent score just doesn't have the edge that Bernard Herrmann's music gave to Hitchcock's films.

Finally, the camera spends almost as much time on Rob Lowe's bare tush as it does on some supporting actors. There are many highs in the movie, but one gets the idea that his bottom is the real Lowe of the movie.

Naturally, Masquerade is rated R. You know this wild and wooly Hamptons crowd. The cheeky entertainment starts at 2 p.m. Saturday November 5th at the Ross School Auditorium on Goodfriend Drive (off 114). I am your host Guy De Fraumeni, along with Sarah Halsey and perhaps a special guest. We'll enjoy snappy talk, refreshments, and very fresh entertainment.

Entertainment In Town

review: in my life...by gordin & christiano

In My Life, the new Broadway musical from Joseph Brooks, who gave the world the Academy Award winning song "You Light Up My Life" from the 1977 film of the same name, is an ego trip of the grandest proportions. Mr. Brooks wrote, composed and directed this banal love story that is little more than a preachy concoction of sweetness advocating the notion to live for the moment because "life turns on a dime."

Performed without an intermission the show runs an hour and 45 minutes and plays like an extravagant commercial for new age love with its attendant aphorisms. There are some clever ideas, but nothing is fleshed out beyond cute and sentimental, the apparent operatives for the evening. The characters are one-dimensional and the surface story is so poorly developed that there is not one single moving moment.

The central character, J.T. (Christopher J. Hanke), suffers from Tourette's syndrome and is given to uncontrollably shouting rhymes laced with obscenities. He is all nervous energy and spastic ticks. Jenny (Jessica Boevers), an obsessive compulsive who edits personals for the Village Voice, falls for him after hearing him sing on the radio. She brings him back to her apartment, he moves in and within two weeks, they fall hopelessly in love with no perceptible chemistry.

Now meanwhile, up in heaven, Winston (David Turner), a campy diva who files in out of the proceedings, is attempting to put on an opera based on J.T.'s life. Unbeknownst to him, God is a pudgy jingle writer named Al (Michael J. Farina) who wears a baseball cap backwards and auditions for the opera.

To keep things lively, J.T.'s mother and sister, who died in an automobile accident, visit him from heaven. They are Roberta Gumbel singing beautifully as his mother, Liz, and a charismatic Chiara Navarra as his sister Vera. Then there is Nick (Michael Halling), Jenny's ex, who also died in an automobile accident. Amongst the living is Jenny's friend Samantha (Laura Jordan) who dispenses supportive advice.

If the story is unremarkable, the direction is even worse. The evening unfolds at an intensely manic pitch, with occasional lulls and a wink here and a wink there. The one-leveled mess is jarringly devoid of nuance with strained comedic interludes.

The songwriter, who is well known for his jingles for Volkswagen, Dr. Pepper, Pepsi, and American Airlines, has written a pretty score, but the music is unfortunately generic and the lyrics mundane. Every song sounds much like the last and not one is memorable.

A lot of money has been lavished on the production. The evening was produced professionally, with sets by Allen Moyer and costumes by Catherine Zuber that are excellent.

Mr. Brooks, please come off the mountain top, listen to another viewpoint, and by all means learn the lesson. The theatre is about collaboration. Many fine books have been written on the subject.

In My Life opened on Broadway October 20, 2005 at the Music Box Theatre, 239 West 45th Street. For tickets call 212-239-6200 or 800-432-7250.

preview: east end special players at guild hall

Did you ever go to a museum and just stare at a painting that you thought was magnificent? Did you marvel at the way the artist captured the scene, their ability to mix the colors just so? You see this magnificent work of art hanging.on the wall, captivating all who gaze at it, yet really know nothing about the person who painted it. Is he short, tall, rich, poor, outgoing, shy? We only know what we see, that the person has an amazing gift.

People are really just incredible, each of us possessing a special, unique gift. Some of us are financial whizzes able to do figures in our heads or play the market like a Wall Street veteran, some are musical prodigies, listening to a piece and playing it back after hearing it only once, others possess an artistic talent, creating paintings from memory or sculptures through touch.

For the East End Special Players, their talent involves putting on dynamic performances and enhancing our world with their creative expression, despite their personal challenges. When you see these talented performers up there on stage riveting the audiences with their captivating performance you forget the reason why this troupe came together and are simply grateful for it. Set to perform "You are a Petunia in my Garden" at Guild Hall on November 5 at 7:30 p.m., this is a performance that shouldn't be missed.

In 1985, a group of individuals with disabilities joined together under the premise that "in the arts there is no disability...there is only ability." The group believes that "enhancing the lives of learning disabled adults and through the theater arts make their world grow larger." The group consists of 20 adults and 4 leaders who meet on Saturdays to practice. They put on a performance once a year and incorporate local artists. Last year they performed Scams of Scapin in the style of Comedia de l'Arte and even featured a mime from the Marcel Marceau School and had a chamber quartet perform. In 2002 they produced an ancient Irish folk tale, The Legend of Deirdre, showcasing a group of Irish Dancers, an Irish vocalist, and musicians. The group was even filmed by Don Lenzer, a noted cinematographer who spent time with the group and captured over seventy hours of videotape for a full-length documentary, which is currently being edited for release.

This year's performance is a special one. Director Jacqui Leader said that the group loves doing improv. It's the type of performing that allows many members to flourish despite their disabilities, such as "speech impediments and limited memory recall." Their practice sessions were taped and played back. Jacqui found that the group really enjoyed seeing their personalities and depictions of their lives captured on tape. Jacqui and the other leaders reviewed the hours of tape and came up with the idea for this year's show. "I'd watch the hours of footage," said Jacqui "and from each vignette I'd pull their own words and create a performance."

Petunia opens with a woman on stage typing the story of her life and the many friends that she has. "It is a story filled with desire and humor, work and play." Other scenes feature a young woman longing to be a movie star, a lonely custodian flirting with the store mannequins, a jealous bride who aces out the competition. Life at home, pride in their jobs and dealing with life on medications are all explored. "The end result is a theatre piece of immense achievement."

The Players have created a touching, often comical theater piece that last year brought the audience to their feet in applause and cheers. The show is set against a "back drop of film, voice-over interviews and music, PETUNIA 2 is more than theatre – it is a milestone in the long and varied history of the troupe."

According to Jacqui, the "actors gained a lot of self respect when performing, they want people to know who they are." Their purpose is for people to "feel empathy for the characters and not feel sorry for them." The ultimate goal of the group is to reach as many people as they can and perform and entertain audiences all over the world.

Tickets come with a suggested donation. Call 631-324 4050 or in person to Guild Hall in East Hampton. Come out, enjoy a great show, and see these talented artists at work and understand the value of theater has on people's lives.

Dave Evans' MINI – MOVIE REVIEWS

North Country

Charlize Theron stars as a female mineworker in this fictionalized account of a groundbreaking sexual harassment lawsuit in America. Director Niki Caro, formerly of Whale Rider glory, successfully avoids much of the cloying worthiness that could bog down such a story aided by a strong supporting cast including Woody Harrelson, Sissy Spacek and Frances McDormand.

Shopgirl

Steve Martin, seemingly still hoping for a Bill Murray-styled resurrection, stars here in the film adaptation of his own novel. Jason Schwartzman and Clare Danes co-star, but the film is marked by an uneasiness of genre. Ostensibly this is a kind of romantic-comedy but director Anand Tucker, better known for the searing Hillary and Jackie, darkens the mood to a somewhat uncomfortable mix. Intriguing but flawed.

Wallace & Gromit: The Curse of the Were-Rabbit

Animator Nick Parks brings back the cheese-loving Wallace and his long-suffering dog, Gromit, in this sequel to the much-loved The Wrong Trousers. Though it can be twee and irritating in all the ways that British comedy can, this never distracts from the ingenuity of the plot or the beauty of the animation itself. The least painful way to take the kids to the cinema since Shrek.

Dreamer: Inspired by a True Story

Clearly whoever gets Dakota Fanning's paychecks is eager to make the most of her youth. So many films, so little time. This is forgettable nonsense in which the accomplished little girl and her father (Kurt Russell here) nurse an injured horse back from the brink and on to the race of a lifetime. Touching, heartwarming, whatever.

Prime

A film about a mother's worst nightmare. A therapist (Meryl Streep) holds countless sessions with her 37-year-old divorced patient (Uma Thurman), who goes on (in every sorted and sexual detail) about an amazing relationship she is having with a 23-year-old artist (Bryan Greenberg). Everything is going quite well until the therapist realized the 23-year-old artist is her son. A very "wonderful" plot ensues.

Jarhead

The heart-wrenching memoir of a Marine sniper and his experiences from boot camp through active duty in Desert Storm. Based on a 2003 bestselling novel by Anthony Swofford, the soldier's tale is bitterly described with truth, humanity, cynicism, and wit – all utilized as personal shields for the characters. A balanced blend of dark comedy and intense drama on a desert battlefield littered with mortar fire and RPG explosions; where an enemy is just over the horizon and death is but a step away.

The Weather Man

This appropriately slow-paced comedy follows Robert Spritz (Nicholas Cage), the local weatherman, as he tries to rebuild his life and prove himself to his dying father (Michael Caine). His daughter is a grossly overweight twelve-year-old smoker with "camel toe," his wife hates him and random strangers are apt to throw their Big Gulps at him on any given day. While the film is crass and silly, it is equally dark. "Easy doesn't enter into grown-up life," Cage reminds the audience throughout the film.

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

ART DOCUMENTARIES AT HAMPTONS FILM FESTIVAL Part III

Documentaries about artists are not all that plentiful at most film festivals. Except at this year's Hamptons Film Festival, where non-fiction movies celebrated the works and lives of local residents Syd Solomon and Tina Barney.

Solomon's film was a bittersweet one, not only because he has since passed away. It's also because the movie recalled his connections to the East End even though Florida had been his permanent home for many years. It was a bit sad, therefore, to realize that some people had missed the opportunity of knowing Solomon and his work, especially the younger generation.

The film, however, made up for some of these missed chances, capturing Solomon's intensity, fervor, and love of life, his work also reflecting such overt boldness and bombastic demeanor. Most obvious was Solomon's generosity of spirit, a quality that the movie conveyed with effective elan.

Tina Barney: Social Studies also showed a penchant for elan, a kind of passion for one's art form that often overrides various challenges. Even so, there's one primary difference between this documentary and Solomon's: while Solomon's paintings reinforce his personality, Barney's photographs sometimes negate her personal attributes. And therein lies the film's interest. Her pictures may be "formal" but she herself seems spontaneous and "real."

Tina Barney: Social Studies

Barney's subjects are the affluent class, including both rich Americans and European high society. Nonetheless, this movie, which features the photographer's trip to Paris, establishes Barney's "realness" early on when she asks a client over the phone, "Do I call you Princess?"

It's an endearing and earthy remark. We immediately like Barney; she's not an arrogant person despite her subject matter and her own affluent roots.

As the film progresses, it also becomes apparent that Barney is "not just a voyeur"; she's a working photographer who has paid her dues and who gets involved with her clients, making them feel comfortable. It's obvious she likes both her subjects and her milieu. And she doesn't apologize for a minute, saying at one point, "I'm more familiar with chateaux than Harlem."

Is this a politically incorrect statement? We don't think so. We bet Barney has been to Harlem a few times herself. And although her photographs are not this critic's personal favorites, preferring Helen Levitt's working class scenes, for example, there's much to be learned from Barney's work.

Honoring the Artist: Gavin Spielman

This week's cover artist, Gavin Spielman, is a man tied to his roots, both literally and figuratively, his image, "Green Pastures," recalling his long connection with the North Fork. As a youngster, Mr. Spielman spent summers and weekends at his family home in Cutchoque, even after moving to Manhattan when he was five years old.

The home is still very much a part of his life as he works to maintain it. "I'm doing it as an homage in a way," Mr. Spielman explains. "The place reminds me of the North Fork's peace and serenity."

Such qualities inspire the artist, his goal to celebrate Long Island's indigenous habitat in his paintings. Even so, his art also serves as an homage to his family, their artistic influences particularly.

"My mother was an interior decorator," Mr. Spielman notes. "She instilled a lot of confidence in me. My grandmother is 85; she still restores antiques. Preserving the natural landscapes for me is like what my grandmother does, restoring antiques."

Mr. Spielman's bond with Long Island also extends to his thinking about other places where he might like to paint natural settings, like the South of France, New Mexico and Wyoming, particularly the latter's sprawling, unsettling land formations. These choices may harken back to his days as a college student when he traveled through Europe and America, camping in our National Parks.

Oddly enough, this penchant for nature, his family and the past all inform Mr. Spielman's work in New York as well. It's not unusual for him to take an easel when he goes to the West Village, where he can capture the "old world" past of Grove and Christopher Streets, for example. "The neighborhood's charm is what drives my work," Mr. Spielman explains, a commitment in his voice that conveys a genuine love for his subject matter.

Living in Chinatown with his wife, Alison, and his young daughter, Sage, also makes sense, considering Mr. Spielman's equal commitment and love for his family. "There's such a mix of cultures here in Chinatown, a sense of community. My daughter's school is on the same block where I first started to paint."

And speaking of starting out, Mr. Spielman was not always a landscape painter, having studied illustration at Parsons (where he now also teaches). "My work exists in two different worlds," Mr. Spielman offers. "One approach is quick, fast and immediate using bright colors, like painting the changing leaves. The other has a darker, timeless feel."

It seems Mr. Spielman has a varied life, enjoying things like yoga, meditation, biking and playing the guitar, things that "add richness to what I do."

Regardless of such interests, however, Mr. Spielman will always put his connection to family and nature first.

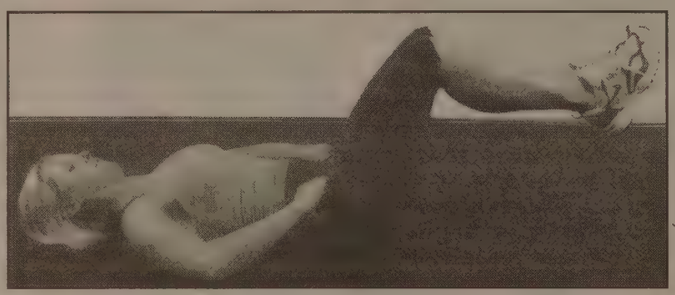
HEALTH, BEAUTY & FITNESS

Rejuvenations by Christina Poulos



During the month of October we're encouraged to focus on the fight against breast cancer, as we're all aware that many women are at risk for it. Though we may hear more about breast cancer, cardiovascular (heart) disease is actually the leading cause of death among women, taking about 500,000 lives a year according to the American Heart Association. Heart disease is also the most preventable disease, yet many mistakenly believe they aren't at risk so they don't take the necessary steps to protect their hearts.

For years, doctors have been trying to figure out the link between obesity and heart disease. "It is well known that obesity affects nearly one-third of adults in the United States and is closely linked withheart disease," said Tongjian You, Ph.D., instructor of geriatric medicine at Wake Forest Baptist Medical Center. A study done at the Wake Forest Baptist Medical Center made an important discovery this year. Belly fat acts like an organ, releasing its own hormones and proteins, in turn affecting one's overall health. This study was published in the April issue of the American Journal of Physiology - Endocrinology and Metabolism, and it assessed whether inflammatory proteins produced by fat are linked to risk factors for heart disease, which include high blood pressure, and how the body responds to insulin.

Genetics determine where people tend to carry their excess fat. Those with apple shaped bodies (fattest in the middle) are at greater risk for heart disease than those who are pear shaped (heaviest around the buttocks, hips, and thighs). That is because fat in the midsection (visceral fat) is stored deeper inside your body, surrounding your liver and other organs. Subcutaneous fat, the fat in the hip and thigh area, is stored just under the skin. The good news (especially if you consider yourself an apple) is that fat in the tummy is usually the easiest fat to lose.

Start to see a difference in your stomach by cutting down on empty calories, the foods you eat with little or no nutritional value. Replace comfort foods (foods that are high in carbs, like cookies and sweets) with wholesome foods like nuts and seeds, beans, fruits and vegetables, and whole grains. Choose cereals that are high in fiber, and sprinkle salads and yogurt with nuts and berries. By learning how to follow a more Mediterranean style diet, you'll be moderately eating heart healthy fats, like olive oil and avocados, and foods rich in omega-3, like salmon, flaxseed, and walnuts.

Combine smart eating with continuous cardio exercise and abdominal training, and you'll see your stomach slim down fast. Belly fat is actually stored energy, so to shed those pounds you need to burn off more calories than you eat. Start with just 30 minutes of cardio a day, a few days a week, and after a few weeks progress to 30-60 minute sessions, 4-6 days a week for maximum fat blasting. If fitting cardio into your schedule is a major challenge, try to fit in a 10-20 minute walk in the morning, during your lunch break, and in the evening before or after dinner. Your heart begins to benefit after about 15-20 minutes of consistent cardio, so it is important to get in these 30 minute or more sessions 2-3 times a week.

Whether you'd rather get ripped at the gym or stay home and sweat solo, train each muscle group at least two times a week, and never the same muscles on consecutive days. Ideal equipment for home workouts are: a medicine ball, large exercise ball, free weights, resistance bands, a yoga mat for pilates, and yoga DVDs. There are a few top exercises, proven to help achieve rapid results in the ab department: Bicycle Exercise, Caotain's Chair,Excerxise Ball Crunch , Vertical Leg Crunch, Torso Track, Long Arm Crunch, Reverse Crunch, Full Vertical Crunch, Ab Rocker, and Plank on Elbows an dToes. To learn how to correctly perform these exercises, go to www.exercise.about.com.

Stave off stress by keeping your midsection slim. Fat in the belly functions differently than any other fat in the body. Stress triggers cortisol levels, causing them to rise, and in turn, more fat is deposited to the abs, because that's where the cortisol receptors are. Diminish stress by deep breathing, yoga, or exercise.

Losing the love handles is one of the most important steps you can take to remain healthy for life. You'll also have the added benefit of amazing abs.

A Little Fun in the Scrum

When I was a junior in East Hampton High School, my old football coach Dave McGarver explained to me the importance of keeping calm and focused in the middle of the chaos that is football. This advice has helped me a lot in dealing with the chaos that is life.

Rugby is a different story, however. It's pretty hard to keep it together when you're running for your life down a field with a bunch of barbarians chasing after you.

There is a society of Rugby players that gets together at East Hampton's Herrick Park every Tuesday and Thursday night to get a taste of carnage for ninety minutes. I decided that I would show up for a practice to see what rugby is all about and found myself playing the sport with the second best rugby team in the nation, The Montauk Sharks.

Rugby is a full-contact, no-joke sport. During any given rugby game or practice you will find yourself crashing to the ground, smacking into somebody at full throttle, getting kicked, getting punched and getting the wind knocked out of you. It is one heck of a good time.

The basic idea of rugby is like that of most sports, which is get a ball from one end of a field to the other end of the field. Most sports have a lot of complicated rules on how you can accomplish this. Rugby is not so complicated. There really aren't that many rules. The one real rule that you have to adhere to is how you pass the ball. You cannot pass the rugby ball in front of you, you can only pass it behind you. This rule applies to running backs in football. Other than that, it is pretty much up to your team how you want to go about getting down the field.

Each team consists of fifteen players. A basic yet difficult strategy for getting the ball down to the goal is to line up your entire team across the expanse of the field and stagger each player. This creates a wall that the opposing team matches by going man-on-man.

Employing this strategy is extremely effective for getting down the field because whenever you are about to get tackled, you can lateral the ball to the player next to you, who can do the same thing. This also prevents gang tackling because each player has to cover one another using a man on man defense. If two or three members of the defense try to tackle a ball carrier, the ball carrier can simply lateral it to the open man, who will run to score.

Getting the ball into the goal area by grounding is called a try and scores you five points. After a "try," a conversion may be attempted which is similar to an extra point in football. If the ball passes over the bar and between the goal posts, you get two points. If you drop kick the ball while it is in play and it goes through the goal posts, you get three points. One of the coolest parts of the game is the scrum, which is when all of the forwards pile together into the middle of the field and try to get the ball with their feet. This happens when the ball gets thrown out of play.

The game is non-stop so you really have to be in good shape if you want to play. It is similar to soccer in this sense because you are always on the move and always have to be aware of what is going on. Running with the ball is an extreme rush because Rugby is literally an organized game of kill the carrier. The longer you have the ball, the more likely the inevitable doom of getting tackled approaches.

Because there is no protective equipment, there is a very real danger of getting hurt during a game, especially when it is a game that is not against friends.

It all depends on who is tackling you, but there are plenty of opportunities for players to get away with dirty moves that can cause an injury. Of course, injuries happen by accident. On just my first day of practice, I found myself in the middle of a "maul" which is a situation that sometimes occurs. Basically what happens is several players crash together in the middle of the field and try to drive down the field with sheer force. Of course the defense matches those players and tries to knock the ball out of the carrier's hands. Fists fly, there is grunting, there is yelling, there is cursing, it is really cool. The first time I found myself in this I got punched right smack in the eye. I didn't even see it coming.

Last Saturday the Montauk Sharks slaughtered the Morris Lions 103 to nothing. What the hell have I gotten myself into now?

Real Estates

Between Westhampton Beach and Montauk, there are nearly 2,700 homes for sale through real estate brokerage houses, and that does not even include Shelter Island, the North Fork, areas like Flanders and the Moriches, or homes being listed directly by owners. That is a lot of inventory. Moreover, each week there are as many as 200 or more broker open houses, those week-day open houses that agents hold for one another. What does this mean for the market? The answer may surprise you.

It is true that many real estate agents I have spoken with feel that the Hamptons market is cooling, as they watch their listings linger on the market longer than had been typical. I certainly see this; even very well-priced houses are not being snatched up immediately as they once were. Some attribute this trend to rain, hurricanes and high heating costs, while others believe that the extraordinary price inflation simply could not last forever. Despite the cool-down, however, experienced Hamptons agents do not believe in the concept of a bursting bubble, but merely a slow-down in price growth. Indeed, some seasoned veterans of past cool-downs say that now is the best time for buyers to get in before the next cycle of serious price inflation, particularly because they can make reasoned choices rather than panic-driven buys for fear that a house will be gone if they don't act fast enough.

Paul Brennan of Prudential Douglas Elliman Real Estate in Bridgehampton, who has worked in the Hamptons real estate market for over 25 years, subscribes to this view. He regards the cool-down as positive, because the double-digit inflation year after year "didn't make sense" and "borders on insanity." Nevertheless, he emphasizes that past cool-downs did not bring about major corrections, but merely price stabilization and adjustments of excessively aggressive pricing. As the reality of the cool-down settles in, sellers will become more negotiable, and buyers will be able to take advantage of good prices. Now is the time to buy.

Krae Van Sickle, manager of the Amagansett and Montauk offices for Allan Schneider & Associates, points to interest rates, storms and even traditional quieting at this time of year to explain an apparent cautiousness on the buy side. He agrees that sellers who have over-reached are not seeing their houses trade quickly, although in any market there are some sales at excessive prices that then encourage others to over-reach. In a discretional market place such as ours, there tends to be something of a randomness factor. Even so, if rumors of high Wall Street bonuses pan out and Fed Chairman Nominee Ben S. Bernanke changes course by ending interest rate hikes or even cutting rates a bit, the spring market could be quite heated, to the dismay of those who waited to buy.

Interestingly, Mr. Van Sickle observed that the Montauk market is acting a bit differently than the rest of the Hamptons because of relatively lower prices and less inventory. He noted that equivalent houses in Montauk and, say, Bridgehampton, will be priced dramatically differently, bringing more people into the Montauk market and allowing it to remain somewhat more robust. Nevertheless, he did say that even in Montauk some well-priced properties have not sold yet.

Incidentally, of the nearly 2,700 Hamptons properties on the market, over 50 are available for $10,000,000 or more, and about 10 of them are offered for at least $25,000,000. These include the late Edward S. Gordon's Three Ponds Estate in Bridgehampton, whose price is available only upon request but which has been reported to be listed for $75,000,000, through Allan Schneider & Associates, and Paul Morrissey's Eothen mansion in Montauk, which is listed for $50,000,000, through Prudential Douglas Elliman.

Police Blotter

This week has provided our community with a variety of interesting crime stories. A recurring trend in the series of crimes reported has been the unusual getaways of the culprits. Without further ado, I bid to you a collection of some of the more interesting criminal escapes:

Remote Control Car Jack

An elusive thief stole $250 from an unlocked Toyota Land Cruiser on Old Sag Harbor Road in Sag Harbor last week. The truck was parked in the owner's driveway. The thief was out of luck, considering there were no keys to start the Land Cruiser and initiate his stealth getaway, but his eyes were attracted to another useful piece of merchandise in the driveway: a Traxxas remote control car valued at $500. He hijacked the toy car like a cowboy abducting a horse after an Old West bank robbery. The miniature vehicle was stolen, but it is unlikely that the culprit actually got away riding it. Either it was too small or he didn't know how to operate a remote control. If you witness any unusual suspects riding atop an unusually tiny car, please contact authorities immediately. But let's get serious; the toy is probably being auctioned off on eBay. Be careful when shopping for your nephew's next birthday present.

Outboard Outlaw

Another unusual getaway occurred in Water Mill sometime between October 10 and October 17. A man reported his Avon inflatable boat and outboard motor, with a combined worth of $4000, were stolen from his front yard. The mystery behind this crime is that the man lives nowhere near the water. The record amount of rainfall a few weeks ago must have provided the perfect medium for escape. But as the ground has dried up, it leaves question as to the current whereabouts of this nautical bandit. S/he must have had a difficult time navigating the way to freedom as the water level shrank and the outboard motor began grinding the pavement.

Another Boating Incident

In a related report, a 14-foot Sunfish sailboat worth $4000 went missing sometime between October 4 and October 14. The boat was located near Louse Point in Springs. Can you guess the number one suspect? That's right, the ocean. Police believe the high water levels, due to the copious amount of rainfall a few weeks back, led to the boat's washing out to sea. When police approached the ocean for questioning, it roared and crashed, showing complete disrespect. Enough of the water jokes; I think I used the same one last week.

Tooth Fairy Thief

A woman who lives in Shinnecock Hills reported that a burglar removed an air conditioning unit to gain access to the bedroom of her Longview Road home. The thief left a shiny trail of evidence after pulling off a grand heist. They apparently stole a large quantity of loose change from a jar and left behind a path littered with coins. Why this small-scale criminal didn't just grab the entire jar is completely over my head. Another case of a bone-headed escape, but an escape nonetheless. Maybe the culprit enjoys the thrill of the chase. Maybe it's the tooth fairy, running out of resources. Maybe it's just an idiot. All that is known is that this woman is going to be extremely displeased after her next trip to CoinStar.

On a more serious note…

Traffic Dispute

Road rage can be dangerous, but this story goes beyond danger into the realm of insanity. A traffic dispute between a 44-year-old man and his 19-year-old punk neighbor in Hampton Bays ended in bloodshed. It was a case of the old-age-oppressing-youth situation in which a man reprimanded a boy for driving a car too fast in the neighborhood. Instead of respecting his elders, the youth decided to mediate the argument – with a shotgun. He shot his neighbor in the leg and fled the scene, only to turn himself in 3 hours later. He now faces five to 25 years in prison. Why didn't he just slow down?

Lower Mortgage Payments by 45%

With Sophisticated Jumbo Loan Program

NY - Mortgages for multi million dollar homes is typically limited to 50% financing, carries a higher rate and requires full income verification.

A scarcely known loan is available for home purchases and refinances that offers up to 90% financing, cuts monthly payments by as much as 45% and requires no income verification. Additionally there are enhanced tax and pre-payment advantages with increased cash flow not available with other mortgages.

Many wonder why they haven't been informed about this unique loan. One reason is this loan does not profit lenders in the same way other loans do so they're not easy to find. The company sponsoring these programs, North Atlantic Mortgage Corp., has made a Free report "Sophisticated Jumbo Financing" available. This report also addresses many other unique types of mortgages, credit issues, and most importantly how to get a great Jumbo loan with no income or asset verification.

If you are self-employed, professional or high-income individual, there are many other savvy "secrets" and various loan options that you probably aren't aware that exist.

Simply call 1-877-794-5363 to request this informative free report.
